

UNITED STATES BANKRUPTCY COURT
EASTERN DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN RE:	.	Chapter 11
	.
Island View Crossing II, L.P.,	.
	.
Debtor.	.	Bankruptcy #17-14454 (ELF)
.....
Kevin O'Halloran, In His	.
Capacity As Chapter 11	.
Trustee For Island View	.
Crossings II, L.P.,	.
	.
Plaintiff,	.
	.
v.	.
	.
Prudential Savings Bank,	.
et al.,	.	Adversary #17-0202 (ELF)
	.
Defendants.	.	Adversary #18-0280 (ELF)
.....

Philadelphia, PA
August 13, 2021
1:56 p.m.

TRANSCRIPT OF TELEPHONIC BENCH OPINION

BEFORE THE HONORABLE ERIC L. FRANK UNITED STATES BANKRUPTCY JUDGE

APPEARANCES:

No Attorneys Were Present During The Ruling

Audio Operator:

Transcribing Firm:

Writer's Cramp, Inc.
1027 Betty Lane
Ewing, NJ 08628
609-588-8043

Proceedings recorded by electronic sound recording, transcript produced by transcription service.

1           THE COURT: Presently before the court are two 2   adversary proceedings, consolidated for trial, titled Kevin 3   O'Halloranvs.Prudential Savings Bank. The adversary numbers 4   are 17-202 and 18-280. The adversary proceedings are 5   related to the bankruptcy case of Island View Crossing II, 6   LP, bankruptcy #17-14454.

8           The first adversary proceeding, #17-202, which I will 9   refer to as the lender liability action, consists of the 10   Trustee's lender liability complaint and the response thereto.
11   The debtor commenced this action in the Court of Common Pleas, 12   Philadelphia County, Pennsylvania, prior to the filing of the 13   bankruptcy case. Let me make a correction. I'm not sure it 14   was in Philadelphia County, but it was in the Court of Common 15   Pleas, the initial filing. The common pleas action was 16   subsequently removed to the bankruptcy court, and upon 17   appointment of the chapter 11 Trustee, Mr. O'Halloran, he 18   succeeded the debtor as the plaintiff.

19          The second adversary proceeding, 18-280, which I will 20   refer to as the avoidance and subordination action, consists 21   of claims brought by the Trustee for avoidance and recovery of 22   transfers and equitable subordination of Prudential's claim in 23   this bankruptcy case. Presently before the court are the 24   Trustee's motion for partial summary judgment, which was filed 25   only with respect to the Trustee's claims in the avoidance and

1 subordination action, and Prudential's motion for summary 2 judgment filed with respect to all claims asserted by the 3 Trustee in both adversary proceedings.

4 Today I am issuing my bench opinion explaining my ruling
5 upon both motions. An order will be entered on the docket 6 setting forth the terms of the ruling. The reasons for the 7 decision are being stated in this bench opinion, recorded 8 today, August 13, 2021. However, because this will be a very 9 lengthy bench opinion, rather than employing my usual practice 10 of placing an audio file on the docket, instead, I will obtain 11 a transcript of this recorded bench opinion which will allow 12 me to edit it before docketing the transcript as my bench 13 opinion. Once docketed, the document will constitute my 14 opinion explaining the reasons for my ruling on these 15 two motions.

16 As this is a bench opinion that is unpublished and the 17 parties are familiar with the procedural and factual 18 background, I will set out only those parts of the procedural 19 and factual history necessary to make this bench opinion 20 generally comprehensible. A more complete discussion of the 21 background of the parties' dispute is set out in this court's 22 memorandum of May 23rd, 2019, which is reported at 604 23 Bankruptcy Reporter 181. That decision granted in part and 24 denied in part Prudential's motion to dismiss the complaint.
25 In that decision I ruled that while some of the Trustee's

1 avoidance claims, including all of the claims under 12 Pa.C.S.
2 §5105, were not adequately pled in the complaint and would be 3 dismissed with leave to amend, four of the Trustee's avoidance 4 claims under 12 Pa.C.S. §5104(a) were adequately pled, and 5 therefore survived dismissal. My decision also denied 6 Prudential's motion to dismiss the Trustee's equitable 7 subordination claim.

8 After that decision, the Trustee did not file an amended 9 complaint. Thus, the Trustee's claims presently before the 10 court in the lender liability action are claims for 11 breaches of the lending contract, including the covenant of 12 good faith and fair dealing, the implied covenant of good 13 faith and fair dealing, and tortious interference
14 with contract. In the avoidance and subordination action 15 the claims are for avoidance of four transfers under 12 16 Pa.C.S. §5104(a) and 11 U.S.C. §544, and for equitable 17 subordination of Prudential's claim to all other claims in the 18 bankruptcy case.

19 As I stated at the outset, the parties have filed 20 competing motions for summary judgment pursuant to Federal 21 Rule of Civil Procedure 56, made applicable to adversary
22 proceedings by Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 7056. I 23 have previously discussed the legal standard for summary
24 judgment motions in reported decisions. I will not burden 25 this bench opinion with an oral recitation of the various

1 legal principles governing summary judgment motions. Instead,
2 I will simply cite and incorporate by reference my discussion
3 of the issue in the case In Re Polichuk, 506 B.R. 405, 420-4 422 (Bankr. E.D. Pa 2014).

5 To address the parties' dueling motions for summary
6 judgment, I begin with the Trustee's fraudulent transfer
7 claims. The Trustee has filed these claims under §544(b) (1)
8 of the Bankruptcy Code which, generally speaking, grants to 9 the Trustee whatever avoidance powers are available to 10 unsecured creditors under non-bankruptcy law. See, e.g., 11 In Re Equipment Acquisition Resources, Inc., 742 F.3d
12 743, 746 (7th Cir. 2014). §550 of the bankruptcy code permits
13 the Trustee to recover for the estate the value of any avoided 14 transfers. The Trustee seeks to avoid and recover four 15 transfers under Pennsylvania's Uniform Fraudulent Transfer 16 Act, which as I explain later has been amended and renamed.
17 The statute is codified at 12 Pa.C.S. §§5101 through 5114.

18 Before identifying the four transfers at issue, it is 19 helpful to set out and name a number of transactions and 20 property transfers that form the basis of the Trustee's 21 claims. And at the outset, I will state that, in the interest 22 of brevity, from time to time I will state the amounts in the 23 transactions in round numbers, not exact numbers. In the first 24 transaction, in 2011, the debtor granted Prudential a 3.9-25 million-dollar mortgage on its main asset, a piece of real

1 estate. This mortgage is referred to by the parties as the 2 "Steeple Run Collateral Mortgage". Second, in 2013 Prudential 3 lent the debtor $1.3 million in a transaction I will refer to 4 as the "2013 IVC loan", or the "IVC loan transaction". The 5 Trustee asserts that some of the loan proceeds in this 6 transaction were transferred for the benefit of Prudential and 7 that those money transfers should be set aside. The third 8 transfer also made in the 2013 IVC loan transaction was the 9 debtor's grant of a mortgage on its real estate to Prudential.
10 For reasons I will explain in a moment, I will refer to that 11 mortgage as the "Durham mortgage", a mortgage 12 that the Trustee seeks to set aside. Fourth, in 2014 the 13 debtor granted Prudential a 5.1-million-dollar mortgage. This 14 mortgage is referred to by the parties as the "Calnshire 15 collateral mortgage". Fifth,
16 later in 2014, following the Calnshire collateral mortgage 17 transaction, Prudential loaned the debtor $5.5 million secured 18 by a mortgage on the debtor's real estate in a transaction 19 that I will call the "IVC construction loan", which was 20 secured by what I will call the "IVC Construction Mortgage".
21 In the Court's order of May 23rd, 2019, I dismissed the 22 avoidance claims with respect to the IVC Construction Mortgage 23 granted in 2014. I mention it now only for purposes of 24 completeness as it is central to the Trustee's limited 25 liability claims, but of course not to the avoidance claims.

1           Turning back to the avoidance claims, the Trustee alleges 2   that the following four transfers are voidable under 3   §5104(a)(2) of 12 Pa.C.S. 1) The debtor's grant of the 3.9-4   million-dollar Steeple Run collateral mortgage; 2) The 5   debtor's transfer of approximately $1.1 million to Prudential 6   that was used to reduce Durham Manor's debt to Prudential, 7   Durham Manor being an affiliate of the debtor, the $1.1
8   million being derived from the loan proceeds of the 2013 IVC
9   loan. Third, the debtor's grant of the 1.4-million-dollar
10   Durham mortgage granted in connection with the 2013 IVC loan.
11   And fourth, the debtor's grant of the 5.1-million-dollar
12   Calnshire collateral mortgage in 2014.

13           Under 12 Pa.C.S. §5104(a)(2), a transfer made or 14   obligation incurred by a debtor is voidable if the debtor made 15   the transfer or incurred the obligation without receiving 16   equivalent value in exchange and 1) was engaged or was about 17   to engage in a business or a transaction for which the 18   remaining assets of the debtor were unreasonably small in 19   relation to the business transaction; or 2) intended to incur 20   or believed or reasonably should have believed that the debtor 21   would incur debts beyond the debtor's ability to pay as they 22   became due.

23           The first element that a plaintiff must establish under 24   §5104(a)(2) is that the debtor made the transfer or incurred 25   the obligation without receiving reasonably equivalent value

1 in exchange. In the May 23rd, 2019 memorandum, I concluded
2 that the avoidance and subordination complaint adequately pled
3 that the debtor did not receive reasonably equivalent value
4 for the transfers in question. More specifically, I rejected
5 Prudential's argument that the transfers indirectly benefitted 6 the debtor by supporting its affiliated entities and their 7 shared principal, Renato Gualtieri,
8 I noted in that memorandum that the value received by 9 the debtor for purposes of §5104(a)(2) is determined by 10 analyzing what the debtor received that is useful to the 11 debtor's creditors. Since the complaint alleged that the 12 debtors received nominal consideration, $1, for granting the 13 Steeple Run and the Calnshire collateral mortgages each, 14 and only fractional consideration, that is approximately 15 $280,000 of the $1.4 million of proceeds related to the Durham 16 mortgage, I held that the complaint adequately pled that the 17 debtor did not receive reasonably equivalent value for these 18 transfers.

19 In their respective motions, the parties do not focus 20 heavily on the reasonably equivalent value element of 21 §5104(a)(2). Nor do they dispute most of the basic facts 22 concerning these transfers, as alleged in the complaint. The 23 Trustee notes that I have already determined that any value
24 the non-debtor entities received as part of these transactions 25 did not constitute value received by the debtor. And given

1 the obvious disparity between what the debtor gave away and 2 what the debtor received, the Trustee asserts that there is no
3 present factual dispute regarding whether the debtor received 4 reasonably equivalent value for the transfers. Prudential
5 makes a minor evidentiary argument, which I will discuss 6 momentarily, regarding the amount of value the 7 debtor received in connection with the September 2013 loan
8 agreement. However, Prudential primarily focuses its argument 9 on the other elements of §5104(a)(2), namely subsection (i), 10 whether the transfer left the debtor with unreasonably small 11 assets, and subsection (ii), whether the debtor should have 12 reasonably believed that it would incur debts beyond its 13 abilities to pay as they came due.

14       Upon review of the evidence submitted, I am satisfied 15 there is no material factual dispute regarding whether the 16 debtor received reasonably equivalent value for the challenged
17 transfers. The undisputed evidence shows that the debtor 18 received nominal consideration in exchange for grants of the 19 Steeple Run and Calnshire collateral mortgages, both multi-20 million-dollar mortgages. These collateral mortgages 21 encumbered the debtor's property by millions of dollars, at 22 least according to the face value of the mortgages, and in 23 exchange, the debtor only received nominal consideration, $1 24 per transaction. It is therefore beyond dispute that the 25 debtor did not receive reasonably equivalent value from

1 Prudential in the Steeple Run and Calnshire collateral 2 mortgage transactions.

3 The evidence regarding the value the debtor received in 4 connection with the September 2013 IVC loan is more
5 complicated. Under the terms of the September 2013 IVC loan 6 agreement, the debtor executed a promissory note along with 7 two other co-obligors in exchange for a 1.4-million-dollar
8 loan from Prudential, and in connection with this loan 9 agreement the debtor also executed and delivered to Prudential
10 a mortgage and security agreement that pledged the debtor's 11 real property as collateral for the loan. In connection with 12 the September IVC 2013 loan agreement, therefore, the debtor 13 received $1.4 million in funds, incurred an obligation to 14 repay the 1.4-million-dollar loan, and transferred a mortgage
15 to Prudential securing the repayment. What creates an issue 16 regarding this agreement is that it required the debtor to use 17 the proceeds of the loan to pay certain settlement costs and 18 to reduce the balance due on Durham Manor LLC's outstanding 19 loan to Prudential, Durham Manor being an affiliate of the 20 debtor. Thus at first blush the loan agreement seems to 21 indicate the debtor did not receive any value from this 22 transaction, with the Durham Manor entity receiving the entire 23 benefit through a reduction of its loan balance to Prudential.
24 However, the loan agreement also specified that monies
25 received by Prudential from subsequent sales of select Durham

1 Manor lots would be used to fund, among other things, certain 2 site preparation and pre-construction projects at the IVC 3 property. The amount allocated for this back-end funding of 4 IVC's property development appears to be capped at $375,000, 5 with an additional $125,000 to be paid to the debtor as a 6 reimbursement of closing costs. See Exhibit-2 page 16 of the 7 attached to the Trustee's motion for summary judgment.

8 The remainder of monies received by Prudential from sales
9 of Durham Manor lots would be allocated back into Gualtieri
10 entities as follows: loan payments: $147,500; Durham Manor
11 construction: $200,000; a refund to Durham Manor for an RDA
12 payment of $120,000; and Calnshire's interest reserve:
13 $100,000; Island View reserve for monthly payments: $50,000; 14 an advance to AmeriCorp, another Gualtieri entity, for 15 operating expenses: $302,250. Thus, September 2013 loan 16 agreement shows that the debtor was not contractually entitled 17 to receive the full proceeds of the 1.4-million-dollar loan 18 that it obligated itself to repay and for which it secured, or 19 it encumbered, the IVC property.

20 I recognize that the loan agreement planned for some of 21 the loan proceeds ultimately to be funneled back to the debtor
22 in some form. However, a substantial amount of the loan 23 proceeds were never intended to be realized by the debtor in 24 any way. Thus, based on the loan agreement alone, I conclude

1 that the debtor did not receive reasonably equivalent value
2 for incurring the 1.4-million-dollar debt secured by a 3 mortgage on its property. That said, it may prove helpful to 4 the parties for me to comment briefly regarding a factual
5 dispute raised by the parties regarding the precise amount 6 that Prudential was to funnel back to the debtor under the 7 terms of the September 2013 loan agreement. The Trustee
8 relies on an analysis of various disbursements, see Exhibit-
9 20, to conclude that only $280,829.84 of the September '13
10 loan ultimately benefitted the debtor. Prudential counters 11 that the Trustee's own spreadsheet omits several significant 12 distribution of funds, totaling $225,000, that the debtor also 13 received on account of lot sales at Durham Manor. Upon review
14 of the document relied upon, I agree that a genuine factual 15 dispute is present regarding the true payee of some of the 16 payments listed in the document. Indeed the Trustee's own 17 analysis indicates that as much as $270,977.20 in 18 disbursements have unknown beneficiaries. See Exhibit-20 at 19 page 13. (This is Exhibit-20 to the Trustee's motion).
20 However, in the end, this factual dispute is not material at 21 this stage of the case. Even accepting Prudential's 22 assertions regarding these payments, the evidence shows that 23 the debtor would only have ultimately received a little more 24 than $500,000 in value in exchange for a 1.4-million-dollar 25 loan and accompanying mortgage. Thus I remain satisfied that

1 the evidence shows conclusively that the debtor did not 2 receive reasonably equivalent value from Prudential in the 3 September 2013 loan transaction.

4 Should the Trustee ultimately prevail in the avoidance
5 and recovery action, the precise amount that the debtor 6 received in connection with this loan will be relevant in 7 determining the scope of the relief to be granted to the 8 Trustee. But such a determination is presently not necessary
9 because the Trustee's motion is being denied on other grounds, 10 which I will get to. Having found the evidence shows that the 11 debtor did not receive reasonably equivalent 12 value in the four challenged transfers, I therefore turn to an 13 analysis of whether the evidence is sufficient to grant 14 summary judgment to either party based on subsections (i) and 15 (ii) of §5104(a)(2) of 12 Pa.C.S. As previously

16 stated, §5104(a)(2)(i) and (ii) provide that a 17 transfer made or obligation incurred by the debtor is voidable
18 if the debtor made the transfer or incurred the obligation 19 without receiving reasonably equivalent value in exchange and 20 either was engaged or was about to engage in a business or a 21 transaction for which the remaining assets of the debtor were 22 unreasonably small in relation to the business or transaction, 23 or intended to incur or believed or reasonably should have 24 believed that the debtor would incur debts beyond the debtor's 25 ability to pay as they became due.

1           The commentary to §5104 points out that the tests under 2       subsections (a)(2)(i) and (ii) should be viewed as addressing 3       slightly different aspects of the same fundamental inquiry, 4       whether the debtor is and on a continuing basis will be able 5       to pay its debt as they become due. See Committee comment #4 6       (1984). I digress for a moment to acknowledge that the 7       committee comment I've just cited was made in connection with 8       the drafting and enactment of the Pennsylvania Uniform 9       Fraudulent Transfer Act in 1984 (PUFTA) and that 10      PUFTA was amended in 2017 and is now called the Pennsylvania
11      Uniform Voidable Transaction Act, (PUVTA)
12      There are new comments to PUVTA, 13      but nothing in my view in the 14      new comments serves to undermine the relevance of the prior 15      comments that I've just referenced, so I will rely on them in 16      construing the statute.

17           Turning back to the text of the statute now, subsection 18      (i) tests whether a transfer leaves the debtor with 19      unreasonably small assets to sustain its operations. As I 20      wrote in the May 23rd, 2019 memorandum, the subsection (i) 21      test does not require insolvency. Instead, the analysis looks 22      at whether the enterprise's failure was reasonably 23      foreseeable. See Peltz v. Hatten, 279 B.R. 710, 744, (D.
Del. 2002), citing Moody,
24      vs. Security Pacific Business Credit, Inc., 971 F.2d 1056,

1 1073 (3d Cir. 1992), where the court states that the test for 2 unreasonably small capital is reasonable foreseeability.-----
-----

3 In the context of an operating business, this test asks 4 whether the transfer in question left the debtor with an 5 inability to generate sufficient profits to sustain
6 operations. See In Re Fidelity Bond & Mortgage Company, 340
7 B.R. 266, 294, (Bankr. E.D. Pa 2006). Subsection (i) 8 therefore focuses attention on whether the amount of all the 9 assets retained by the debtor was inadequate, that is 10 unreasonably small, in light of the needs of the business or 11 transaction in which the debtor was engaged or about to 12 engage. See 12 Pa.C.S. §5104 comment 4. See also United 13 States vs. Rocky Mountain Holdings, Inc., 782 F.Supp. 2d 106, 14 118-119, (E.D. Pa 2011).

15 The ability to avoid a transfer of assets that leaves the 16 transferor with unreasonably small assets does not serve as a 17 basis for second guessing business deals that just simply do 18 not work out. See In Re R.M.L., Inc., 92 F.3d 139, 155, (3d 19 Cir. 1996). Rather, this provision is aimed at transactions 20 where the parties should know that the deal will leave the 21 transferor technically solvent but doomed to fail. MFS Sun
22 Life Trust High Yield Series vs. Van Dusen, Airport 23
Services Company, 910 F.Supp. 913, 944, (S.D.N.Y. 1995).
24 Subsection (ii) of §5104 is closely related to subsection (i), 25 but focuses more on the debtor's intentions and beliefs

1 regarding its ongoing financial condition. In particular,
2 subsection (ii) tests the reasonableness of the debtor's 3 beliefs with regard to whether the transfer or obligation in 4 question will impair its ability to pay its debts as they 5 become due.

6 Before moving to a discussion of the parties' arguments
7 and the evidence submitted, one more provision of the PUVTA 8 warrants mention. §5101(b) provides definitions for the 9 statute, including a definition of the term "asset", which it 10 defines broadly as property of the debtor. However, §5101(b) 11 excludes from the definition property to the extent that it is 12 encumbered by a valid lien. Thus, if a debtor owns property 13 that is completely encumbered by liens, that property is not 14 considered an asset of the debtor under §5101, or if that 15 property is only partially encumbered, then §5101 dictates 16 that only the unencumbered portion of the property will be 17 considered an asset of the debtor. The net effect of this 18 provision is to exclude property interests that are beyond the 19 reach of unsecured creditors from the definition of asset for 20 the purpose of these provisions. See 12 Pa.C.S. §5101
21 committee comment #2 (1984).

22 A committee comment to this section also states that in 23 the case of property encumbered by a lien securing a 24 contingent obligation, such as a guarantee, in general it 25 would be appropriate to value the obligation by discounting

1 the face amount of the debt to reflect the probability that 2 the guarantee will ever be called upon. See also Siematic, 3 Mobelwerke, GmbH & Co. KG 4 v. Siematic Corp., 643 F.Supp. 2d
675, 691, (E.D. Pa. 2009).

5 I will discuss these legal principles in connection with each
6 challenged transfer starting with the 2011 Steeple Run 7 collateral mortgage.

8 The Trustee's argument with respect to the 2011 Steeple 9 Run collateral mortgage is straightforward. In 2011 when the 10 debtor granted this mortgage, its only asset was its real 11 estate, which I will call the "IVC property". After 12 accounting for the existing mortgage on the property, which is 13 held by the Redevelopment Authority, securing 14 its purchase money loan to the debtor,
15 and based upon an appraisal from May of 2011, see Plaintiff's 16 Exhibit-12, the Trustee maintains that the debtor had about 17 $3.4 million in equity in the IVC property, but with 18 no working capital or other resources to fund its business 19 operations. The 2011 Steeple Run collateral mortgage 20 encumbered the IVC property by an amount greater than the 21 existing equity, the face amount of the mortgage being $3.9
22 million plus an attorney's commission. This 3.9-million-23 dollar amount represented the entire principal amount of the 24 debt that Steeple Run - (a separate entity that was a 25 debtor affiliate) -- owed to Prudential on a land acquisition

1 loan from 2008. The Steeple Run Collateral Mortgage entitled 2 Prudential to foreclose on the IVC property upon any default
3 by Steeple Run for the entire amount of the Steeple Run land 4 acquisition loan or, at the option of Prudential, for the 5 amount necessary to cure the default. See Exhibit-13, the 6 Trustee's motion.

7 Together with the existing RDA mortgage on the property,
8 the Trustee argues that the grant of the Steeple Run 9 collateral mortgage left the IVC property encumbered by 10 approximately $6.4 million of mortgages at a time when the 11 property was valued at only $5.8 million. And since the 12 debtor would need several millions of dollars to begin 13 construction on the IVC project, the Trustee asserts that the 14 transfer of the Steeple Run collateral mortgage left the 15 debtor at that time with unreasonably small assets in relation 16 to its business and an inability to pay debts as they came 17 due.

18 Prudential responds first by noting that in 2011 the 19 debtor was not developing the IVC property. Prudential argues 20 that the debtor was merely a landholding company at the time 21 it acquired the IVC property, and remained a landholding 22 company at least until 2013 when it took out the IVC loan. In 23 2011 the only obligations the debtor had were real estate
24 taxes and RDA loan payments. Further, Prudential highlights 25 the fact that despite the grant of the Steeple Run mortgage,

1 the debtor retained an ability to raise working capital. The 2 debtor made pitches to investors, subsequent to the Steeple 3 Run collateral mortgage, that purported to show significant 4 earnings potential in the IVC project. Debtor's principal, 5 Gualtieri, testified at his Deposition that he did not believe 6 that granting the Steeple Run collateral mortgage would impair 7 the debtor's ability to make its RDA loan payments. In 8 addition, the debtor borrowed additional funds from 9 Prudential, just two years after granting the Steeple Run 10 collateral mortgage, to begin construction on the IVC project.
11 Thus, Prudential contends that the granting of the Steeple Run 12 collateral mortgage did not leave the debtor with insufficient 13 capital to sustain its operations nor should the debtor have 14 reasonably believed that the mortgage would render it unable 15 to pay its debts as they became due. After considering the 16 competing arguments and the evidence submitted by the parties, 17 I conclude that the issues under subsection (i) and (ii) of 12 18 Pa.C.S. 5104(a)(2) are not ripe for summary judgment due to 19 the existence of disputed issues of material fact.

20 Discussion of subsections (i) and (ii) requires analysis
21 of multiple subcomponents, including the assets of the debtor 22 in 2011 and the business needs of the debtor in 2011. I'll 23 start with the discussion of the debtor's 2011 assets, as that 24 term is defined in §5101. The parties do not dispute that the 25 only substantial asset that the debtor possessed in 2011

1 before granting the Steeple Run collateral mortgage was the 2 IVC property. A May 2011 appraisal of the property valued it 3 at slightly over $5.8 million. The IVC property was 4 encumbered by a 2.5-million-dollar purchase money mortgage, 5 leaving the debtor with approximately 3.3 to 3.4
6 million dollars of equity. And as stated earlier, the Steeple
7 Run mortgage exceeded that, since it had a face value of 3.9
8 million. Thus if the Steeple Run mortgage encumbered the IVC 9 property by its full face value, the IVC property would have 10 had negative equity of approximately $500,000. Being fully 11 encumbered by valid liens, the IVC property would not be 12 considered an asset of the debtor, following the grant of the 13 Steeple Run collateral mortgage. The debtor would then be 14 considered to have no assets remaining after the transfer for 15 purposes of §5104(a)(2)(i).

16 Prudential disputes this conclusion regarding the 17 debtor's assets by making two primary arguments. First, that 18 the collateral mortgage only encumbered the IVC property by 19 the shortfall in the Steeple Run property's equity, and 20 second, that the face value of the collateral mortgage should 21 be reduced based on the probability that the Steeple Run loan 22 would ever be called in against IVC. I will address these 23 arguments in turn.

24 First, I am not persuaded by Prudential's assertion that 25 the Steeple Run collateral mortgage at most encumbered the IVC

1 property by an amount equal to the shortfall of the equity in 2 Steeple Run's own property. A few undisputed facts regarding 3 the Steeple Run property and the Steeple Run loan must be 4 considered first. In 2008, Prudential loaned $3.9 million to 5 Steeple Run for the purpose of purchasing Steeple Run's real 6 estate. Steeple Run granted Prudential a mortgage on the 7 Steeple Run property to secure the loan. By September of 8 2011, when the debtor granted Prudential the Steeple Run 9 collateral mortgage, the Steeple Run property was worth 10 approximately $3 million and the balance of the Steeple Run 11 loan was approximately $3.9 million.

12 See Gualtieri Deposition at 46 to 48.

13 Prudential's theory is that because the Steeple Run 14 property had an equity shortfall of only $900,000, and 15 assuming, as Prudential does, that the Steeple Run property
16 would be sold first in the event of any default by Steeple 17 Run, Prudential asserts then that the debtor would, at most, 18 be required to cover the $900,000 difference remaining after 19 foreclosure on the Steeple Run property. That, of course, 20 would leave the debtor with substantial equity in the IVC
21 property. The problem with Prudential's theory is that it
22 conflicts with the unambiguous terms of the Steeple Run 23 collateral mortgage. The document gives Prudential the right, 24 upon default by Steeple Run on the Steeple Run loan, to 25 foreclose against the IVC property for the entire principal

1 amount of the mortgage, or whatever amount is necessary to 2 cure the default. Again, see Exhibit-13 to the Trustee's
3 Motion. Prudential incorrectly asserts that because Gualtieri
4 testified that the Steeple Run property would be sold before 5 Prudential would pursue collection of 6 of any deficiency against 7 the IVC property
8 that the 900,000-dollar figure is the proper amount to be 9 considered. Prudential has stretched Gualtieri's testimony 10 far past its breaking point. Gualtieri merely admitted the 11 arithmetic regarding how much encumbrance would remain on the 12 IVC property, assuming that the Steeple Run property was sold 13 first. See Gualtieri Deposition at 51 to 53.
14 Perhaps more importantly, Gualtieri's testimony on this point 15 is irrelevant, as the terms of the collateral mortgage control
16 the legal rights of the parties, not Gualtieri's suppositions 17 about what would happen in the event of a default. Under 18 §5101, assets of the debtor do not include property to the 19 extent that it is encumbered by a valid lien. Since the 20 Steeple Run collateral mortgage gave Prudential the 21 unqualified right to foreclose on the IVC property for the 22 full amount of the balance of the Steeple Run loan, that 23 number being $3.9 million, the existence of the 24 additional collateral securing the Steeple Run loan is 25 irrelevant. Thus, for purposes of determining a debtor's

1 assets under §5101(b), I hold that the facial amount of the 2 mortgage or the loan balance of the underlying mortgage, if 3 less, is the proper starting point in determining the 4 encumbrance a mortgage places on the debtor's property.

5 But there is a second argument, and I turn to that second 6 argument, which is that the face value of the collateral 7 mortgage should be reduced based on the probability that the 8 Steeple Run loan would ever be called. At the outset, I agree 9 with Prudential that the 2011 Steeple Run collateral mortgage
10 was a contingent obligation. It is undisputed that the debtor
11 was not obligated to repay the Steeple Run loan. The debtor's 12 obligation would be triggered only upon a default by Steeple 13 Run, the primary obligor. In other words, the debtor 14 effectively was a guarantor. Trustee asserts, in, 15 that it is a well established principle that mortgages are 16 not contingent liabilities. See Trustee's Reply Brief at 17 6. However, the cases cited by the Trustee do not establish a 18 per se rule regarding mortgages. In each of the cases cited 19 by the Trustee, it appears that the mortgagor had granted the 20 mortgage in connection with and to secure a promissory note 21 for which the mortgagor was the primary obligor. Thus in 22 those cases, the mortgages and accompanying notes would 23 properly have been considered fixed liabilities rather than 24 contingent liabilities.

25 The Steeple Run and Calnshire collateral mortgages differ

1 from the mortgages in those cited cases in that the mortgagor, 2 (here the debtor), was not liable under the notes and its 3 obligation or more -- or perhaps more accurately the IVC
4 property's obligation under the collateral mortgages only 5 would arise upon the occurrence of a default by the primary 6 obligors. Thus, I agree with Prudential that the collateral
7 mortgages granted by the debtor to Prudential are contingent
8 liabilities for purposes of a fraudulent transfer analysis 9 under Pennsylvania law. Consequently, it is appropriate under 10 §5101(b) to discount the face value of these mortgages by the 11 probability that the underlying debt will come due to the 12 debtor, here IVC. See 12 Pa.C.S. §5101 comment 2 (1984).
13 Such a determination is necessary because §5104(a)(2) requires 14 consideration whether the remaining assets of a debtor 15 following a challenged transaction were unreasonably small in 16 relation to the entity's business needs. Having agreed with 17 Prudential that the Steeple Run collateral mortgage is 18 contingent in nature, I conclude that there is insufficient 19 evidence at the summary judgment stage to determine the amount 20 or degree to which the face value of the mortgages should be 21 discounted.

22 The parties have submitted little evidence regarding the 23 risk of default by Steeple Run on the underlying Steeple Run 24 collateral mortgage obligation. Prudential refers to a 25 concession from Gualtieri that when the debtor granted the

1 collateral mortgage in 2011, Steeple Run was not in default, 2 Prudential had never alleged a default, and that there was 3 nothing to suggest that such a default was likely. See 4 Gualtieri Deposition at 57-60. On the other side, the 5 Trustee, having asserted that the collateral mortgages are not 6 contingent, has not mounted a substantive argument or 7 developed evidence regarding the probability that Steeple Run 8 would default, such a default thereby entitling Prudential to 9 foreclose on the IVC property. Thus the only evidence 10 submitted regarding the probability that Prudential would call 11 in the Steeple Run mortgage against IVC consists of 12 Gualtieri's deposition testimony. However, I find Gualtieri's 13 unadorned statement that Steeple Run was not likely to 14 default to be minimally probative evidence at this stage of 15 the litigation, and insufficient to permit me to discount the 16 face value of the collateral mortgage without engaging in 17 sheer speculation regarding the risk of Steeple Run's default.
18 And, since the debtor's grant of the collateral mortgage 19 resulted in a total facial encumbrance on the IVC property of 20 approximately $500,000 more than the property was worth, I am 21 unable to find as an undisputed fact that the debtor had any 22 remaining assets following the transfer of the Steeple Run 23 collateral mortgage or the amount of those assets.

24 But the Trustee fares no better on this issue, 25 particularly considering that as respondent, Prudential

1 receives the benefit of all reasonable inferences. I have no 2 difficulty accepting the proposition that some discount of the 3 face value of the collateral mortgage would be appropriate, 4 based on the contingent nature of the obligation itself. But 5 the Trustee has pointed to no evidence that would suggest that 6 this discount would be minimal. Therefore, I must assume that 7 the evidence may show, especially in light of Gualtieri's 8 Deposition testimony, that the discount to the face value of 9 the collateral mortgage would be substantial, thereby 10 leading to the conclusion that the debtor retained 11 significant equity in the IVC property following the grant of 12 the Steeple Run collateral mortgage.

13 In sum, I find a disputed issue of material fact remains 14 with regard to the debtor's assets under §5101 following the 15 transfer of the Steeple Run collateral mortgage, making it 16 impossible to make a ruling on summary judgment.
17 §5104(a)(2)(i) requires an analysis of whether the remaining 18 assets of the debtor will run reasonably small in relation to 19 the debtor's business following the transfer. Without 20 establishing what assets remain, there is a disputed issue of 21 fact.

22 I reached the same conclusion regarding subsection (ii)
23 of §5104(a)(2). The text of subsection (ii) does not 24 explicitly require consideration of a debtor's assets in 25 weighing whether, in connection with the challenged transfer,

1 the debtor intended to incur or reasonably should have 2 believed it would incur debts beyond its ability to pay as 3 they become due. However, determining whether the debtor
4 retained an ability to pay its forthcoming debts following a 5 challenged transfer logically requires consideration of the 6 assets that the debtor retained from which a debtor could pay 7 those bills or raise money to pay those bills. See 12 Pa.C.S.
8 §5104 comment 4 (1984). Consideration of the debtor's 9 assets under (ii) is particularly appropriate here where the 10 debtor had only one meaningful asset and 11 no stream of income. Thus I find the 12 parties' failure to establish and absence of disputed material 13 facts regarding the debtor's remaining assets precludes 14 summary judgment under both subsections (i) and (ii) of 15 §5104(a)(2).

16 Nevertheless, I will briefly discuss the submitted
17 evidence regarding the debtor's business and anticipated 18 business needs. Such an analysis is also necessary under both 19 subsections (i) and (ii). Subsection (i) requires the court 20 to determine whether the debtor's remaining assets are 21 unreasonably small in light of its business activities, and 22 subsection (ii) requires the court to determine whether the 23 debtor intended or reasonably should have believed that the 24 challenged transfer would have left the debtor unable to pay 25 its bills as they became due. Similar to my conclusion

1 regarding the existence of a factual dispute as to the 2 debtor's remaining assets, I also conclude that material 3 disputed facts exist regarding the debtor's business and 4 anticipated business needs at the time of the Steeple Run
5 collateral mortgage. The Trustee relies on the undisputed 6 fact that the debtor needed millions of dollars to fund 7 development of the IVC property, and it had no way of 8 generating revenue at the time. It fully encumbered its only 9 asset with the collateral mortgage. Thus, the Trustee asserts, 10 as a logical conclusion that the debtor was doomed to fail and 11 would be unable to pay its then extant bills, which consisted 12 of ongoing real estate taxes and RDA loan payments. On the 13 flip side, Prudential insists that the Debtor was merely a 14 landholding company in 2011 and therefore did not need 15 millions of dollars at that time. Prudential also notes that 16 the Debtor had access to funds from its affiliates that would 17 enable it to pay its ongoing bills and did, in fact, obtain 18 additional capital to fund development for Prudential in later 19 years.

20 I find evidentiary holes in both parties' positions.
21 First, from the Trustee's side, the Trustee takes it as a 22 given that evacuating the equity from IVC property necessarily 23 prevented the debtor from obtaining financing to complete the 24 IVC project. I do not find this assumption to be 25 self-evident. Granted, a real estate development company

1 would be in a stronger financial position if the property it 2 owned and intended to develop had millions of dollars in 3 equity that could be used to obtain development financing.
4 But it is not entirely clear to me that a developer would be 5 unable to procure development financing in the absence of such 6 equity, much less that a developer's company would be doomed
7 to fail. The Trustee has developed no evidence on this point.
8 Plus, I cannot ignore the fact that the debtor did in fact 9 obtain a construction loan in 2014, albeit from Prudential.
10 Without some additional evidence, perhaps expert testimony, I 11 am unwilling to draw the inference on this bare record that 12 the Trustee asks me to make. Now if the Trustee develops 13 a record that the debtor's business in 2011
14 required millions of dollars in equity to succeed or to pay 15 its bills as they became due, the outcome may differ.

16 Prudential's theory has its own set of problems. Without 17 drawing any final conclusion, I do find some intuitive appeal
18 in Prudential's argument that the debtor was merely a 19 landholding company in September 2011, and therefore did not 20 need millions of dollars in development financing at that 21 time. This assertion also has some evidentiary support 22 because it is undisputed that the debtor delayed development
23 of the IVC property until several years after the Steeple Run 24 transaction. And, Gualtieri testified that the debtors delayed 25 development of the IVC property at least in part to try to

1 time "the market." See

2 See Gualtieri Deposition at 80. However, it remains clear
3 that the ultimate purpose of IVC was to develop the property 4 and the actions taken in 2011 could have ramifications when 5 the time finally came for IVC to commence the development
6 process. I need further evidence or argument on this issue

7 Also, Prudential fails to point to probative
8 evidence demonstrating that the reasonably anticipated 9 ultimate capital needs of the debtor as of 10 September 2011 were such that the debtor could reasonably 11 assume that it could raise the money that it needed. Concerns
12 I have include whether the debtor
13 reasonably would need unencumbered equity in the IVC property 14 to obtain subsequent financing. Prudential's observation that 15 the debtor did obtain such financing in 2013 and afterward, 16 while of some probative value, does not entirely cure the 17 problem. I note that the debtor's acquisition of additional 18 funds for Prudential may have been enabled in part by IVC's 19 appreciation in value from 5.8 million in 2011, arguably to 20 $6.4 million in 2013, and $7.8 million in 2014. Was such 21 appreciation reasonably certain in 2011 when the debtor 22 granted the Steeple Run collateral mortgage? That 23 determination requires that I engage in fact finding which I 24 may not do at the summary judgment stage.

25 Also, the additional financing came from a lender with

1   whom the debtor had an existing relationship, perhaps 2   suggesting that Prudential was, to put it colloquially, "in for 3   a penny, in for a pound," and that the financing from 4   Prudential might not otherwise have been obtainable in the 5   open market. My point here is that the record is bare 6   and that the fact that the debtor subsequently acquired 7   development funds standing alone does not demonstrate that the 8   transfer of the collateral mortgage in 2011 did not leave the 9   debtor with unreasonably small assets in light of its business 10   needs. Or at a minimum, I will have to engage in fact finding 11   even if I do not receive additional evidence on the issue. Nor 12   does the subsequent Prudential financing demonstrate that the 13   Debtor reasonably should have believed that after the transfer 14   it could pay its bills as they became due.

15

16         A similar logic undermines Prudential's reliance on the 17   mere fact that the debtor obtained development financing

18   following the transfer, particularly since it was obtained 19   from Prudential. A business' access to necessary financing

1 years after a challenged transfer that syphoned off a
2 significant portion, or perhaps all of the business' equity, 3 does not necessarily prove that the transfer did not impair 4 the business to such a degree that it was likely to fail, or 5 to be unable to pay its bills as they fell due.

6 I'll also note that I perceive some ambiguity under the 7 PUVTA regarding how to treat the debtor's access to and 8 receipt of funds from its affiliates which the debtor
9 apparently used to pay its ongoing obligations for property
10 taxes and RDA loan payments. I noted in my May 2019 11 memorandum that any value the debtor received in the 12 challenged transfers should be viewed from the perspective of 13 the debtor's creditors. See 604 B.R. at 14 196. Perhaps such an approach also is proper under §5104 of 15 the PUVTA when considering the debtor's financial condition
16 following its alleged transfers. From a creditor's 17 perspective, a debtor's dependence upon funding from 18 affiliates that is based on an informal relationship rather 19 than contractual obligations may justifiably appear ephemeral 20 and unreliable. Such a source of funding depends solely on 21 the continued largess of the gifting affiliates. Plus, I may 22 be persuaded, but I do not at this time decide, whether the 23 availability of funds from the debtor's affiliates establishes 24 the kind of financial soundness that subsections (i) and (ii)
25 of §5104(a)(2) require. In other words, without more evidence

1 at summary judgment, I cannot determine that the debtor's 2 reliance on the resources of its affiliates permits any 3 finding of an undisputed fact under §5104(a)(2). I mention 4 this issue to flag it for the parties as an issue that may 5 play a greater role as litigation progresses. The bottom line 6 is the only way I could grant summary judgment with respect to 7 this first transfer would be to engage in fact finding at 8 the summary judgment stage. I am not prepared to do so.

9 The next two transfers challenged by the Trustee 10 derive from the 2013 IVC loan
11 agreement. These claims
12 involve, first, the Debtor's putative receipt of $1.4 million 13 in funds and incurrence of an obligation to repay the 1.4-14 million-dollar loan. I'm referring to the 2013 IVC loan. The 15 second is the debtor's grant of a mortgage to Prudential 16 securing that repayment, that mortgage being the Durham 17 mortgage. The Trustee's argument under subsections (i) and 18 (ii) of §5104 is relatively straightforward. The 2013 IVC
19 loan required the debtor to allocate the majority of the 1.4-20 million-dollar loan for use by its affiliates. Accordingly, 21 the debtor, arguably, only received approximately $280,000 in 22 value for incurring an additional $1.4 million in debt while 23 granting an encumbrance of $1.4 million on its only asset. In 24 that effect of the loan and mortgage left the debtor with $7.8
25 million in mortgages on its property, then valued at 6.4

1 million. At that time, the debtor had only $10 in cash
2 reserves, had not generated any revenue, had not yet commenced
3 construction on the IVC development project, and still needed 4 millions of dollars to develop the IVC property, according to 5 the Trustee. Thus, the Trustee asserts that the transfer left 6 the debtor with an unreasonably small capital for its business 7 and unable to pay its bills as they came due.

8 In response, Prudential notes that in July 2013 Gualtieri 9 asserted that the debtor was not short of equity and was 10 poised to be successful. Further, in September 2013, 11 Gualtieri did not believe that the 2013 IVC loan would render 12 the debtor unable to pay its bills, in part because the 13 proceeds from the Durham house sales would be funneled back to 14 the debtor and would enable the debtor to pay the bills.
15 Prudential also argues that the value of the IVC property 16 exceeded the encumbrances on it even after the additional 1.4-17 million-dollar mortgage is added to the property. Prudential 18 reaches this conclusion by again asserting that the Steeple 19 Run collateral mortgage should be discounted down from its 20 face value, based on the then-existing equity shortfall for 21 Durham which Prudential calculates as $770,000. Adding to the 22 $770,000 the remaining balance of the RDA loan, the then 6.4-23 million-dollar IVC property had a net value of more than -- 24 net equity of more than $2 million, according to Prudential.

25 Upon consideration of the parties' arguments and evidence

1 and for largely the same reasons articulated in detail in 2 connection with the Steeple Run collateral mortgage, I conclude 3 material issues of disputed fact remain with respect to both 4 subsections (i) and (ii) in connection with the 2013
5 transaction. Primarily, there are still disputed issues
6 regarding how to calculate the debtor's assets under 12
7 Pa.C.S. §5101(b). In September 2013 the debtor still had only 8 one primary asset, the IVC property. The parties have not 9 presented persuasive evidence how this court can discount the 10 value at summary judgment of the Steeple Run collateral 11 mortgage, first in 2011, now again in 2013. I am unable, 12 under the summary judgment standard, to determine the value of 13 the debtor's only piece of property. I again cannot determine 14 whether the debtor's assets were unreasonably small in 15 relation to its business, or whether the debtor would have 16 been able to and should have known that it could not pay its 17 debts as they fell due.

18 In addition, I reiterate my observation that the parties 19 did not present persuasive evidence regarding the debtor's 20 ability to access necessary credit in light of its reduced 21 equity following this transfer. The availability of such 22 access to credit may be crucial in determining whether the 23 added encumbrances to the IVC property would have 24 significantly increased the likelihood that the debtor's IVC
25 project would fail or would have rendered the debtor unlikely

1 to pay its bills as they came due.

2 Prudential cites instances of the Debtor, specifically
3 Gualtieri, soliciting outside investors prior to the debtor's
4 transfer of significant equity through the IVC loan in 2013,
5 and Prudential asserts that because at least one potential
6 investor offered Gualtieri a deal for financing in exchange 7 for an interest in IVC, IVC had the ability to 8 generate sufficient profits to sustain its operations at that 9 time. See Prudential's Memorandum in Support of Motion
10 for Summary Judgment at 13. However, because this offer
11 and Gualtieri's accompanying projections of the IVC project 12 success preceded the challenged transfer, they do not 13 persuasively demonstrate that the debtor's financial strength 14 or access to necessary capital following the transfer would be 15 adequate.

16 Also lurking in the shadows of this transaction is the 17 Debtor's access to and use of affiliate funds to pay bills as 18 they came due, and how this court should view the debtor's 19 financial position under §5104 in light of that informal 20 business relationship between the Debtor and its affiliates.
21 Thus, for substantially similar reasons as those described in 22 my analysis of the Steeple Run collateral mortgage, I find 23 that the parties have not demonstrated an absence of material 24 disputed facts with respect to the debtor's remaining assets
25 and business needs following the 2013 IVC loan and the grant

1 of the Durham mortgage in connection with them. Neither party 2 has demonstrated an entitlement to summary judgment under 3 subsections (i) or (ii) of §5104(a)(2).

4 Next I turn to the Calnshire collateral mortgage. I
5 reach the same conclusion with respect to the parties' motions 6 for summary judgment with respect to this mortgage. The 7 parties' arguments regarding this mortgage largely track their 8 arguments regarding the other challenged transactions. The 9 Trustee asserts at the time of this transfer the debtor had 10 only $1,500 in working capital to fund its business 11 operations. Debtor's grant of the Calnshire collateral 12 mortgage further encumbered the IVC property by the face 13 amount of the mortgage, approximately $5.1 million. Together
14 with the other liens on the IVC property, the RDA loan 15 mortgage, the Steeple run collateral mortgage, and the 16 September 2013 IVC mortgage, the IVC property was encumbered
17 by almost $13 million in mortgages and worth only $7.8 million 18 according to the Trustee. Since the debtor still needed 19 several millions of dollars to develop the IVC project, the 20 Trustee asserts that the transfer of the 2014 collateral 21 mortgage left the debtor inadequately capitalized and unable 22 to pay its debts as they became due.

23 Prudential responds by first noting that the Calnshire 24 collateral mortgage secured the Durham Calnshire loan, which 25 is May of 2014 had a remaining balance of only $2.8 million.

1 The Durham Calnshire loan was also secured by 2 the Calnshire property which was worth approximately $2.6
3 million. We are again looking at the argument that the equity 4 shortfall left the debtor exposed for only $200,000. If 5 reduced to that level as an encumbrance on the IVC property, 6 Prudential calculates that IVC still had a net equity of over 7 $3 million. Prudential's argument again assumes that the 8 mortgages on the IVC property should be calculated only by 9 looking at the equity shortfall on the additional collateral.
10 I have previously explained why I disagree with that.
11 Further, Prudential notes that the Debtor was able to acquire 12 some capital in May of 2014 from Gualtieri's brother and his 13 wife and from Nancy Maychuk who, the parties agree, is 14 Gualtieri's girlfriend. Thus, Prudential contends that the 15 granting of the Calnshire mortgage did not leave the debtor 16 with insufficient capital to sustain its operations; nor 17 should the debtor have reasonably believed that the mortgage 18 would render it unable to pay its debts as they became due.
19 Once again, I find the parties' positions are flawed for 20 largely the same reasons as those explained in my analysis of 21 the Steeple Run collateral mortgage and the September 2013 22 loan agreement. There are still disputed issues of fact with 23 respect to what assets remain to the debtor following the 24 grant of the mortgage.

25 Like the Steeple Run collateral mortgage, the Calnshire

1 collateral mortgage gave Prudential the unqualified right to 2 foreclose on the IVC property upon default for the entire 3 principal amount of the mortgage, which is 5.1 million. Thus, 4 the face value of the Calnshire collateral mortgage is the 5 appropriate starting point for determining the encumbrance on 6 the property, and again the parties have not provided evidence 7 which would allow me to make any determination about 8 discounting that amount based on any reduced probability that 9 the Calnshire collateral mortgage would be called upon the 10 default by the primary obligor. I am unable to quantify the 11 remaining assets of the debtor following this transfer in any 12 way that would permit a grant of summary judgment.

13 In addition, the parties have not provided evidence 14 regarding the debtor's ability to obtain development financing 15 following the transfer of the Calnshire collateral mortgage.
16 The Trustee relies solely on the face value of the mortgages
17 and assumes the Debtor would be unable to obtain development 18 financing. As I stated previously, this assumption is not 19 entirely self-evident to me and I have no evidence on the 20 issue to substantiate the Trustee's assumption. Prudential 21 points to two instances in May 2014 where the debtor did 22 obtain some financing for the IVC project. However, the 23 financial transaction with Gualtieri's brother and his wife 24 appears to have occurred on the same day that the debtor
25 granted the Calnshire collateral mortgage to Prudential,

1 that date being May 30, 2014.
2 Therefore I cannot determine whether this transaction should 3 be considered as occurring subsequent to or prior to the 4 Calnshire collateral mortgage. And as I stated earlier, the 5 inquiry under (i) and (ii) of §5104(a)(2) is a forward-looking 6 inquiry starting with the time of the challenged transfer, 7 even if the financial transactions occurred prior to the 8 collateral -- Calnshire collateral mortgage transaction. The 9 transactions are not especially 10 probative in determining whether the debtor would have been 11 able to obtain financing to finish the IVC project following 12 the grant of the Calnshire collateral mortgage.

13 It appears likely that this transaction occurred
14 contemporaneously with the grant of the Calnshire collateral 15 mortgage, so that determining which transactions occurred 16 first may be of little value. In any case, the significance 17 of these transactions is just unclear. Moreover, it is not 18 obvious that a capital infusion from insiders who appear to 19 already have ties to the Gualtieri entities actually 20 demonstrates that the debtor was on solid financial footing
21 with respect to its anticipated business needs or its present
22 and ongoing obligations. The same issues arise with respect 23 to the other investor, Nancy Maychuk.

24 For all these reasons, I conclude the parties have failed 25 to demonstrate a lack of disputed material facts. The

1 evidence at this point simply does not demonstrate what assets 2 remained to the debtor following the transfers or whether the 3 debtor could reasonably anticipate that it could obtain 4 financing or pay its bills. Accordingly, both parties'
5 request for summary judgment with respect to the Trustee's 6 transfer and recovery action will be denied.

7 I next turn to Prudential's
8 motion for summary judgment in connection with the lender
9 liability action. The Trustee's lender liability action
10 consists of claims for breaches of the lending contracts 11 including the covenant of good faith and fair dealing and for 12 tortious interference with contracts.

13 I will first address the breach of contract claims.
14 Distilled from the Trustee's Response and Surreply, the 15 Trustee contends that Prudential breached the lending 16 contracts and specifically the implied duty of good faith and 17 fair dealings, by refusing to honor its commitment to 18 refinance the Lava loan, threatening foreclosure when 19 Prudential knew no default existed and delaying the release of 20 funds for the development of the IVC property. The Trustee 21 also refers to what he considers Prudential's improper conduct 22 in declaring sham defaults and efforts to change reporting
23 and draw requirements in an effort to take over the IVC 24 project in violation of a court order.

25 In its motion for summary judgment and reply to the

1 debtor's submissions, Prudential argues that the Lava loan is 2 irrelevant to alleged breaches of the lending contracts. The 3 Debtor was in fact in default as of February 2016 when draws
4 were delayed, and any delay in funding the draw and escrow 5 release requests were due to the Debtor's own failure to 6 submit required supporting documentation. Regarding the 7 implied duty of good faith and fair dealing, Prudential 8 insists that it was only acting in a manner consistent with 9 the clear terms of the lending contracts.

10 Pennsylvania contract law is well established and the 11 principles are very basic. To recover for breach of contract 12 a plaintiff must prove 1) the existence of a contract 13 including its essential terms; 2) the breach of a duty imposed 14 by the contract; and 3) resulting damages. See, e.g., 15 In Re Green Goblin, Inc., 470 B.R. 739, 749, (Bankr. E.D. Pa.
16 2012). When performance of an obligation arising under a 17 contract is due, any failure on the part of the party charged 18 with that obligation amounts to a breach. See Green Goblin, 19 470 B.R. at 749. Every contract in Pennsylvania also has an 20 implied duty of good faith and fair dealings. See Donahue vs.
21 Federal Express Corporation, 753 A.2d 238, 242, (Pa.
22 Super. Ct. 2000). However, these implied duties do not 23 override express provisions in a contract. See Wells Fargo
24 Bank, N.A. vs. Chun Chin Yung, 317 F.Supp.3d 25 879, 888 (E.D. Pa 2018). The implied duty of good faith and

1 fair dealings may be invoked where a contracting party 2 exercises a contract right but does so in a manner that is 3 unreasonable and oppressive and takes undue advantage of the 4 counter-party, thereby frustrating the overarching purpose of 5 the contract. The burden of proof in a contract action is on 6 the party asserting the breach, and the standard is 7 preponderance of the evidence. Green Goblin, 470 B.R.
8 at 749.

9 The Trustee alleges three explicit breaches of the 10 lending contracts by Prudential. I will discuss each in turn 11 and focus on the evidence submitted by the parties, then I 12 will follow up to analyze how the evidence squares with the 13 Trustee's theories regarding the implied duty of good faith 14 and fair dealing.

15 I begin with the Lava loan as the first of the 16 Trustee's breach of contract claims. The Trustee asserts that 17 Prudential breached the lending contracts by reneging on its 18 agreement to purchase or refinance the Lava loan. A few 19 background facts will help frame this discussion.
20 It appears undisputed that Prudential 21 required the debtor to raise at least $600,000 in additional 22 funds as a precondition of entering into the 2014 IVC
23 Construction Loan. To satisfy Prudential's demand, the debtor 24 and Gualtieri's father, Francesco Gualtieri, as joint 25 borrowers, obtained a $625,000 loan from Lava Funding, LLC.

1 Prudential, through its then-Vice President,
2 Salvatore Fratanduono,
3 the vice president, sent letters to Lava
4 Funding on October 20, 2014, promising to refinance the loan 5 balance of the Lava loan no later than 15 days prior to its 6 loan maturity, and it was a short-term loan. Prudential also 7 sent letters to Francesco Gaultieri on November 21st, 2014, in 8 which it made similar promises. Debtor argues that Prudential 9 made these promises in order to induce the Debtor to accept 10 the loan terms offered by Lava Funding and to induce Lava
11 Funding to make the loan. Lava Funding did make the $625,000
12 loan to the debtor and Francesco Gaultieri on December 1st, 13 2014. The note obligated the borrowers to repay interest only 14 from January to December 2015 at which time a final balloon 15 payment would fall due. Prudential reneged on its 16 promises to Lava Funding and Francesco Gaultieri to refinance 17 the loan balance when the time for its performance came due in 18 November 2015.

19 Lava Funding subsequently commenced litigation against 20 Prudential, the debtor, Renato Gaultieri and Francesco
21 Gaultieri, which ultimately was settled by the parties six 22 months later.

23 The Trustee maintains that Prudential's failure to 24 perform the Lava loan obligation was a factor that led to the 25 demise of the IVC development project. And the Trustee

1 asserts that Prudential's failure to honor its commitments 2 with respect to the Lava loan constituted a breach of the 3 lending contracts between Prudential and the debtor.

4 Prudential responds primarily by asserting that 5 Prudential's actions with respect to the Laval loan are 6 irrelevant for the Trustee's breach of contract claims.
7 Specifically, Prudential argues that its alleged failure to 8 refinance Lava loan cannot be construed as a breach of the 9 2014 construction loan. After reviewing the evidence 10 submitted by the parties, I agree with Prudential. The 11 Trustee has failed to demonstrate that the agreements or 12 promises from Prudential to Lava Funding or Prudential to 13 Francesco Gaultieri were part of the lending contracts between 14 Prudential and the Debtor, IVC.

15 The commitment letters sent by Prudential to Lava Funding
16 and to Francesco Gaultieri do not reference the lending 17 contracts between the Debtor and Prudential; nor are they 18 addressed to the debtor. Likewise, the Lava loan note does 19 not reference the lending contracts between the Debtor and 20 Prudential, although it does refer to Prudential's promise to 21 refinance the loan.

22 Thus, neither the Lava loan nor Prudential's commitment 23 letters demonstrate any connection to the lending contracts
24 between the Debtor and Prudential. The inverse is also true.
25 The 2014 construction loan agreement does not recognize or

1 incorporate the agreements between Prudential and Lava
2 funding, or Prudential and Francesco Gaultieri. It does 3 contain a reference to Lava Funding in Section 1.5, which 4 relates to the payments the debtor was to receive from the 5 sale of the first 25 homes in the IVC project. However, this 6 bare reference does not establish a connection sufficient to 7 demonstrate that Prudential's promises to refinance the Lava 8 loan should be considered part of the loan contract between 9 the debtor and Prudential.

10 This result does not change, even if I accept that, 11 through these letters, Prudential intended to induce the 12 debtor, Lava Funding, and Francesco Gaultieri to enter into 13 the separate Lava loan agreements. From the evidence 14 submitted, it appears Prudential merely insisted that the 15 Debtor raise additional capital as a pre-condition to its own 16 infusion of funds into the IVC project. Such insistence, 17 standing alone, would not make Prudential a party to the 18 lending agreements between the debtor, Francesco Gaultieri, 19 and Lava Funding.

20 Even giving the Trustee all beneficial inferences, the 21 current evidence does not establish that Prudential's promises 22 for Lava Funding and Francesco Gaultieri were part of the 23 lending contract between Prudential and the debtor.

24 Accordingly, there is no present support in the record 25 for the conclusion that Prudential's decision to renege on its

1 promises to Lava lending and Gaultieri, suggested by the 2 Trustee, would constitute a breach of any express contractual 3 provision between Prudential and the debtor.

4 My conclusion is reinforced by the fact that the record
5 is devoid of any evidence connecting this breach to any damage 6 suffered by the debtor. As discussed in my prior memorandum 7 regarding the limited scope of this court's subject matter 8 jurisdiction reported at 598 B.R. 552, it appears that the 9 Lava Loan has been repaid by Prudential, and Prudential does 10 not appear to have made any claim in this bankruptcy case 11 against the debtor based on the Lava loan.

12 That said, I make no conclusive determination regarding 13 the admissibility of trial evidence regarding the Lava loan 14 transaction. It is possible that this evidence could 15 constitute a part of the evidentiary framework to support a 16 claim for a breach of the implied duty of good faith and fair 17 dealing.

18 But standing alone, the Lava loan transaction did not 19 give rise to any claim for a breach of contract based on any 20 express contractual provision.

21 I now move on to the Trustee's contention that Prudential 22 breached its lending contracts with the debtor by repeatedly 23 threatening to declare a default and foreclose, when 24 Prudential knew such default did not exist. The Trustee 25 asserts that such stark repudiation of its agreements with the

1 debtor constituted an anticipatory breach of contract. In 2 response, Prudential points out that it paid $680,000 to fund
3 site approval work at the IVC property in the months following
4 the November and December 2015 meeting, in which the Trustee 5 alleges such anticipatory repudiation occurred.

6 Prudential argues that it is, therefore, impossible to 7 find any alleged threats of foreclosure as anticipatory 8 breaches of its lending contracts. Again, I agree with 9 Prudential. A party's renunciation of a contract constitutes 10 an anticipatory breach if the party states an absolute and 11 unequivocal refusal to perform, or a distinct and positive 12 inability to do so. See In re: St. Mary's Hospital, 101 B.R.
13 451, at 457 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1989).

14

15 The Trustee offers as evidence the November and December 16 2015 meeting notes between Debtor representatives and bank
17 representatives. Those notes were composed by Gaultieri.
18 And those notes were attached to a declaration submitted with 19 the Trustee's motion through the declaration of 20 Michael Cordone, its attorney. These are at Exhibits 16 and 21 17. I have serious doubt about the competency of this 22 evidence. See Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56(c)(2).

23 But even if I consider this evidence, it does not help 24 the Trustee. According to the Trustee, in both of these 25 meetings, Prudential's representatives informed Gaultieri of 1 their belief that the debtor was in breach of the lending

2 contracts. On the basis of this and certain other assertions, 3 Prudential insisted that Gaultieri accept new lending terms.
4 See the Cordone Declaration, Exhibit 16, which includes 5 quotations such as, "You are in default; we can foreclose on 6 you." Another quotation is, "We are not negotiating with you.
7 We are telling you what we want going forward or we will 8 foreclose on you."

9 Prudential, however, indicated its willingness to 10 continue financing the IVC project, but only on its own terms.
11 The import of the Cordone Declaration was: "if you 12 agree on everything, we will not foreclose. You have my word 13 on it. We will continue to finance Island's view."

14 Crucially, however, Prudential never stated unequivocally 15 that it would not perform under the lending contracts with the 16 debtor. Rather, Prudential threatened to foreclose, which was 17 a remedy permitted by the lending contracts upon the debtor's 18 default. This distinction is important.

19 In the cases cited by the Trustee, the parties found to 20 have anticipatorily breached their contracts, made statements 21 or took actions indicating an absolute and unequivocal refusal 22 to perform their contractual obligations. The breaching 23 parties did not, as Prudential did here, merely accuse the 24 other party of default, and threaten to exercise contractual 25 remedies.

1           The cases cited by the Trustee, therefore, are 2   inapposite. In addition, Prudential did not actually cease 3   performance under the contract, following the November and 4   December 2015 meetings. Its ongoing performance is entirely 5   inconsistent with the legal standard here, that legal standard 6   being an absolute and unequivocal refusal to perform.

7           I also point out that Prudential's email correspondence
8   with the debtor following the November and December 2015 9   meetings demonstrates Prudential's intention to continue to 10   fund the IVC project, (although, as will be discussed, 11   Prudential did begin to insist that the Debtor submit 12   additional documentation with its draw requests, which the 13   lending contract permitted Prudential to do).

14          This all does not arise to an anticipatory breach of 15   contract. Viewed in context, Prudential's 16   statements at the November and December 2015 meetings cannot 17   reasonably be considered to be an anticipatory breach of the 18   lending contracts. The evidence shows that Prudential's 19   allegations of default and threats of foreclosure were merely 20   part of an aggressive negotiating posture.

21          I recognize that the Trustee has offered the 22   Cordone Declaration, which if accepted, would suggest that 23   Prudential's agents knew or believed that the debtor was not 24   in default when they made the threats at the November and 25   December 2015 meeting.

1           However, even accepting that fact, potential statements
2   do not constitute an anticipatory breach of the lending 3   contracts. At best, that conduct may be relevant in 4   evaluating whether it exercised its contractual rights
5   consistent with the implied duty of good faith and fair 6   dealing.

7           Finally, I turn to the heart of the Trustee's alleged 8   breaches of expressed contractual provisions. Prudential's 9   failure to fund, draw requests, and escrow disbursements in a 10   timely manner under the lending contracts. The Trustee 11   references several such draw requests and escrow
12   disbursements. See Trustee's Response to Prudential's
13   Motion at 19-20, and Cordone's Declaration at ¶ 50.a 14   I will discuss them one at a time. But before 15   I do, it is helpful to describe briefly a few of the contract 16   provisions that are relevant.

17           Section 5.2 of the 2014 construction loan agreement 18   specifies the draw request process by which the debtor would 19   receive funds for construction of the IVC project. See 20   Exhibit 5 to the Cordone Declaration.

21           In relevant part, Section 5.2 states that disbursements 22   and advances shall be made upon written application for 23   payment in a form and content satisfactory to Prudential.
24   Section 5.2(b) further states that Prudential reserved the 25   right to approve the form and content of each application, and

1 to verify the representations made by an inspection of the 2 real property and the improvements.

3 Section 5.3 obligated Prudential to fund such draw 4 requests on or about three business days after receipt of an 5 application, provided that Prudential had inspected and 6 verified various representations the Debtor to make in 7 connection with the draw request.

8 Also relevant here, Section 5.4 states in part that 9 Prudential would not have an obligation to fulfill draw 10 requests if the debtor was in default of its obligations under 11 the contract.

12 Now, on to the draw requests. The first draw request that 13 the Trustee alleges occurred was that Prudential unduly 14 delayed a draw request submitted by the debtor on December 15 1st, 2015. The Trustee emphasizes that the contractual 16 obligation was to fund such draw requests on or about three 17 business days after receipt of an application. Prudential 18 failed to release funds for the December 1st, 2015 draw 19 request until January 16, 2016, 46 days after the request was 20 made.

21 Relying on the Cordone Declaration, the Trustee 22 further alleges that this was the first draw request for which 23 Prudential demanded additional invoices, schedules, and other 24 documentation, and insisted on writing check directly to the 25 subcontractors. See Cordone Declaration ¶ 50.

1           The Cordone Declaration also states that the debtor's
2   first nine draw requests from July 24th to November 18th, 3   2015, were typically funded within three business days. In 4   response, Prudential points out that Gaultieri admitted that 5   Prudential was contractually entitled to verification of the 6   work performed. This included receipt of invoices from 7   particular vendors. See Gaultieri Deposition at 600-602.

9           Gaultieri also admitted that the loan agreement permitted 10   Prudential, at its sole discretion, to issue checks directly 11   to any subcontractor or material. See Gaultieri 12   Deposition at 372, and the 2014 Construction Loan Agreement 13   ¶ 5.5.

14          Prudential further points out that emails from 15   Prudential's employees show that Prudential only delayed 16   fulfillment of this draw request because the debtor had not 17   submitted the subcontractor's names, addresses, or amounts due 18   in connection with the December 1st, 2015 draw request.

19          For example, one of Prudential's senior vice presidents, 20   Douglas Smith, emailed the debtor's counsel on January 6th, 21   2016, stating that the bank was only waiting on this 22   information to make payment. See Exhibit D to Prudential's 23   Reply in Support of its Motion for Summary Judgment

24          In another email dated January 14th, 2016, another

1 Prudential senior vice president, Alex Nadalini, 2 asserted that Prudential had informed the Debtor, at least 3 by December 24th, 2015, that Prudential would fund all 4 legitimate costs directly related to the IVC project, provided 5 that the Debtor submitted the required documentation. See 6 Exhibit 27 to the Cordone Declaration.

7 And on January 15th, 2016, Douglas Smith informed the 8 Debtor by email that the December 1, 2015 draw request would 9 be fulfilled the following day. See Prudential's Reply at 10 Exhibit E.

11 Though not stated in the January 15, 2016 email, or shown 12 by any other evidence submitted to the court for that matter, 13 Prudential asserts that it did, in fact, release the funds to 14 fulfill the December 1, 2015 draw request upon receipt of the 15 necessary supporting documentation from the Debtor. And I do 16 not see any place where the Trustee has disputed this fact.

17 Upon review of the evidence submitted by the parties 18 regarding the December 1, 2015 draw request, I find a number 19 of disputed issues of material fact remaining. Despite the 20 massive amount of discovery conducted in this case, neither 21 party submitted the December 1st, 2015 draw request itself, or 22 the supporting documentation, if any, the debtor provided.
23 That said, the evidence just discussed does demonstrate the 24 following undisputed facts.

25 The debtor submitted a draw request on December 1st,

1 2015, at least by January 14th, and perhaps as early as 2 December 24th, Prudential requested the names of payees in 3 order to pay them directly, and Prudential apparently 4 fulfilled this draw request on January 16th, 2016, by writing 5 checks directly to the subcontractors.

6 It is also clear to me, based on Gaultieri's testimony 7 and Section 5.5 of the Construction Loan Agreement, that 8 Prudential had the right in its sole discretion to issue
9 checks directly to the subcontractors. However, some key 10 factual issues remain unclear regarding this draw request.

11 The record does not disclose when Prudential made its 12 demand to the debtor for additional information, whether the 13 first such request made on December 24th, or January 14th, or 14 January 16th for the names of the subcontractors and the 15 additional information that was required for direct payment.
16 This is significant, because the contract may fairly be 17 interpreted as imposing a duty upon Prudential to either fund 18 or deny the draw request on or about three days after receipt 19 of the application. See Construction
20 Loan Agreement ¶ 5.3.

21 If, upon receipt of the December 1 draw request, Prudential 22 waited until December 24th, or perhaps even later, to make 23 this demand for the first time, and otherwise ignored the draw 24 request until then, then the Trustee may have a viable claim 25 that Prudential breached its obligations, and an actionable

1 claim, assuming that all of the other elements of a breach
2 could be established (e.g., that the Debtor incurred 3 damages as a result of this delay).

4 But giving the Trustee the benefit of all favorable
5 inferences, Prudential has not demonstrated that it did not 6 breach the lending contract with the debtor when it did not 7 properly fund or deny the December 1st draw request.

8 I recognize that the contractual procedure for 9 disbursement of funds in the 2014 construction loan agreement 10 contains some conditions precedent to Prudential's duty to 11 perform. However, Prudential does not argue that any 12 conditions precedent, other than the debtor's failure to 13 provide the names and addresses of the subcontractors, would 14 justify its failure to fund or deny the debtor's draw request 15 made on December 1st within three business days.

16 Next, I turn to the January 14, 2016 draw request.
17 Although it's not entirely clear in the record, it appears the 18 Debtor submitted this draw request on January 14th.

19 See Cordone Declaration ¶ 50(b)(i) and Exhibit 20 30 and 31 thereto.

21 After the initial submission of this draw request, the 22 Debtor resubmitted the draw request on January 25th.
23 According to an email from Cordone to Prudential, Prudential 24 had requested that additional information be included, which 25 Cordone attached to the resubmitted draw request. Exactly

1 what additional information Prudential requested, or when, is 2 unclear from the record. Cordone stated in the email that the 3 revised draw request replaced the January 14th draw request.
4 A week later, or more than a week later, perhaps on February 5 1st, the Debtor again resubmitted the same revised 6 draw request to Prudential.

7 At least according to Cordone's email, the Debtor then 8 resent the same revised draw request and supporting 9 documentation that it had sent on January 25th, 2016. The 10 only evidence in the record regarding the February 1st 11 resubmission, which is Cordone's February 1st email, indicates 12 that the January 25th and February 1st resubmissions were 13 identical.

14 Therefore, the record supports a finding that Prudential
15 funded the January 14th draw request ten days after the debtor 16 first submitted, and revised, and properly documented the 17 request on January 25th. The record suggests, therefore, that 18 the draw request was honored in early February. Prudential 19 offers no explanation why it waited ten days to fund the 20 request after the request was revised with supporting 21 documentation on January 25th. Again, Prudential has not 22 demonstrated that the Trustee cannot establish a claim for a 23 breach of contract with request to the January 14th request.

24 The next draw requested issue was made on February 10th, 25 2016. According to Michael Cordone, the February 10th, 2016

1 draw request was not honored until April 13th, 2016. It 2 appears that the only evidence regarding this request is 3 the Cordone's Declaration, which does not cite to 4 any of the exhibits attached to the Declaration to support his 5 attestation. However, Mr. Cordone was representing the Debtor 6 during this period, and his emails to Prudential demonstrate 7 his involvement in the draw request process.

8 Prudential has not submitted any evidence that would 9 undermine the Cordone Declaration regarding this draw request, 10 and whether through inadvertence or deliberate omissions, 11 Prudential does not reference this draw request in any of its 12 memoranda.

13 Therefore, for purposes of evaluating Prudential's motion
14 for summary judgment, I will accept the Cordone Declaration 15 regarding the February 10th draw request. The record, 16 therefore, supports the Trustee's allegation that there was a 17 breach of the lending contract by funding the February 10th 18 draw request more than two months after its submission.

19 Prudential does argue in its reply memorandum that the 20 debtor was in default of a loan document as of February 2016.
21 See Prudential's Reply at 27. The event giving rise to 22 the alleged default was the debtor's failure to deposit in an 23 escrow account with Prudential all security or escrow deposits 24 on the property.

25 Gaultieri admitted at his deposition that the debtor

1 received a number of escrow deposits from Prudential buyers, 2 but did not deposit those amounts in an escrow account. See 3 Gaultieri Deposition at 353-354. Rather, the debtor
4 deposited these funds in his operating accounts and used them
5 to fund construction. Gaultieri recalled Prudential asking 6 that those funds be deposited in an escrow account, but the 7 Debtor never did so. See Gaultieri Deposition at 355-356.

9 On even a cursory reading of the 2015 Construction Loan 10 agreement, a default by the debtor appears to eliminate 11 Prudential's obligation to fund draw requests. See 12 Construction Loan Agreement ¶ 5.4.

13 However, Prudential did not send a notice of default to 14 the Debtor until February 19th, 2016. See Prudential's
15 Reply at Exhibit J. That notice stated that the Debtor's 16 failure to deposit the escrow amount with Prudential, under 17 Section 3.24 of the loan agreement, within 30 days of the date 18 of the letter would constitute an event of default pursuant to 19 Section 9.1(b) of the loan agreement.

20 Thus, assuming the default when uncured, it appeared that 21 the Debtor would not have been in default until at least March 22 20th, 2016. Prudential would have, therefore, been obligated 23 to fund the February 10th draw request under the operative 24 terms of the loan agreement within three days.

25 Therefore, I again conclude that Prudential has failed to 1 demonstrate that the Trustee cannot establish a breach of 2 contract with respect to the February 10th draw request.

3 Next, is the Trustee's alleged claim with respect to 4 draw request dated April 18, 2016. The Trustee relies 5 solely on the Cordone Declaration, which states that 6 Prudential never distributed the requested funds. In 7 response, Prudential argues that this draw request was not 8 funded because it impermissibly sought to pay the debtor's 9 drywall contractor for work performed by other contractors.

10 Prudential cites Gaultieri's deposition testimony
11 regarding the April 18th draw request. Gaultieri reviewed 12 that draw request, which requested funding from various types 13 of completed work, including rough electric, trim, and paint, 14 tile, and kitchen. See Gaultieri Deposition at 526-530 15 tHowever, the draw request asked Prudential to pay the 16 costs for all those completed work items solely to the drywall 17 contractor, about $27,000. Gaultieri admitted that this 18 $27,000 was intended to pay the drywall contractor for work it 19 had completed earlier in the year.

20 Here is what happened. The Debtor submitted a draw 21 request for payment of the drywall contractor's work in 22 January 2016. Prudential funded that draw request, giving 23 those funds directly to the debtor. Instead of paying the 24 drywall contractor, the Debtor used those funds to pay other 25 expenses. Thus, at the time of the April 18th draw request,

1 the drywall contractor had not been paid for the prior work, 2 and the Debtor had already drawn all of the funds that 3 should have been -- had already expended all of the funds that 4 should have been paid to the drywall contractor.

5 To remedy that situation, the Debtor attempted to use
6 funds it would receive through the April 18th draw request
7 that should have gone to other contractors to pay the drywall 8 contractor for the prior work. Gaultieri admitted that such 9 shifting of funds was not permitted under the 2014 Construction 10 Loan Agreement. See Gaultieri Deposition at 497-498.

12 Prudential caught wind of this shifting payment scheme.
13 In the April 25th email between Prudential and the debtor, 14 Prudential points out that the vendor payment for this April 15 18th draw request to the drywall contractor appears to cover 16 much more than just the list -- the drywall's installation 17 expenses. See Cordone Declaration at Exhibit 41.

18 Accordingly, Prudential asked the Debtor to clarify the 19 amount, and whether the drywall contractor performed all of 20 the work listed. Viewing the evidence, even in the light most 21 favorable to the Trustee, it is impossible to see how a breach 22 of contract could be sustained with respect
23 to the April 18th draw request.

24

25 Gaultieri agreed that the 2014 Construction Loan

1 Agreement did not permit the debtor to use funds allocated for 2 the payment of one contractor to pay a different contractor.
3 Therefore, when the debtor submitted a draw request indicating 4 that disbursements for various contractor work would actually 5 be paid to a different contractor, Prudential was well within 6 its rights to refuse that disbursement, at least until the 7 Debtor changed or clarified the draw request.

8 And from the evidence submitted, I see no indication 9 following Prudential's expressed concerns on April 25th that 10 the Debtor provided such a change or clarity.

11 Thus, Prudential's failure to fund the April 18th draw 12 request did not constitute a breach of contract. In addition, 13 as noted earlier, the debtor appears to have been in default
14 by March 20th for failing to deposit escrow funds in an escrow 15 account. The debtor had 30 days to cure the default, and 16 there was nothing to indicate that the debtor did so. In 17 fact, Gaultieri admitted as much. See Gaultieri 18 Deposition at 355-356.

19 Under Section 5.4 of the loan agreement, such a default
20 eliminated Prudential's obligation to fund draw requests.
21 Thus, summary judgment in Prudential's favor is 22 warranted regarding the April 18th draw request.

23 The last express contractual breach asserted by the 24 Trustee involves Prudential's failure to fund an escrow 25 release, requested on February 12th, 2016. The escrow was not

1 released until April 13th, 2016. Escrow releases are governed 2 by a separate contract among Prudential, the debtor, and the 3 Bristol Bureau Water and Sewer Authority. So I will call that 4 the Tri-Party Agreement. See Exhibit 60 to the Cordone
5 declaration.

6 The Tri-Party Agreement operated differently than the 7 2014 loan agreement. Under paragraph 7 of the Tri-Party
8 Agreement, Prudential was required to disburse funds promptly 9 once the bureau made a proper and timely demand for such 10 funds. This obligation was unconditional. Prudential had no 11 discretion with respect to disbursement of funds; nor could 12 the Debtor's insolvency or default impair Prudential's 13 obligation to disburse those funds.

14 Now, turning to the evidence regarding the February 12th
15 escrow release request, on February 12th, 2016, the debtor 16 submitted a properly supported escrow release that had been 17 approved by Bristol Bureau. All prior escrow release 18 requests, each identical in form and content, had been funded 19 within three business days. However, despite the contractual 20 obligation to promptly disburse the funds, Prudential failed 21 to fund the February 12th escrow release request until April 22 13th, approximately 60 days later.

23 The Trustee asserts that Prudential's failure to timely 24 find the draw requests and escrow releases that I've discussed 25 caused substantial project delays, and disharmony and

1 disruption in the relationships between the debtor and its 2 subcontractors, and that these problems ultimately prevented
3 the debtor from completing the IVC project.

4 The Trustee relies on the Cordone
5 Declaration ¶ ¶ 50-51, about which I question 6 probative value. But the Trustee also 7 cites to the declaration of Bernie Sauer, who was the project 8 of the IVC development from September 2015 to 9 March 2016. The Debtor laid off Sauer, along with the entire 10 site staff in March 2016 due to lack of funding.

11 The Trustee has since re-hired Mr. Sauer as the project 12 manager as of September 2018. Mr. Sauer stated that 13 Prudential's delays and non-payments caused numerous 14 subcontractors to begin cutting their work hours at the IVC 15 project in February 2016. By March 2016, Sauer stated that 16 most subcontractors stopped showing up, and refused to do any 17 more work until they were paid.

18 In its reply, Prudential does not challenge these 19 allegations, at least the allegations that it failed to fund
20 the February 12th escrow release request. Instead, Prudential 21 argues that the Trustee has failed to show that any breach 22 caused any damages to the debtor. Prudential notes that when 23 asked, Gaultieri could not recall whether delaying the 24 February 12th escrow release prevented any site work from 25 being performed. See Gaultieri Deposition at 841.

1           However, viewed in the light most favorable to the 2   Trustee, I find that Prudential has failed to demonstrate that 3   the evidence negates any essential element of the Trustee's
4   claim for breach of contract with respect to the February 12th 5   escrow release request. First, on the question of breach, the 6   Tri-Party Agreement obligated Prudential to promptly disburse
7   the funds upon the receipt of a timely and proper release
8   request from Bristol Bureau. It's undisputed that Prudential 9   didn't fund the February 12th escrow release request, which 10   had been approved by Bristol Bureau until April 13th.

11           As to the issue of damages, the only affirmative evidence 12   I have relating to breaches to damages are the declarations of 13   Cordone and Sauer. Both of them state that the delays caused 14   problems with the subcontractors, ultimately leading to the 15   demise of the project. Neither of declarants specify whether 16   it was Prudential's failure to timely fund draw requests, or 17   the February 12th escrow release that damaged the IVC project.

18           However, it is a reasonable inference from their 19   declaration to say that both delays contributed to the 20   project's demise. Accordingly, viewing the evidence in the 21   light most favorable to the Trustee, the declarations support 22   the conclusion, if barely, that delays in funding, draw
23   requests, and the escrow release request damaged the IVC 24   project and damaged the Debtor.
25   Prudential's citation to Gaultieri's Depositions as

1 demonstrating a lack of damages, is unpersuasive. Gaultieri
2 merely could not recall whether the delayed escrow release
3 specifically prevented any site work from being performed.
4 Such testimony does not undermine Sauer's affirmative 5 declarations that the delayed escrow release did damage the 6 project.

7 I note in particular that Sauer, as the on site project 8 manager, appears to have been best positioned to observe the 9 effect of non-payment on the subcontractors. Thus, Prudential 10 has failed to demonstrate an entitlement to summary judgment 11 regarding the February 12th escrow release request.

12 I pause at this point to address a related argument that 13 Prudential raises concerning causation generally. Prudential 14 asserts that the IVC project's demise is attributable solely 15 to the debtor, Gaultieri's, project mismanagement and 16 deliberate misuse of funds. See Prudential Memorandum at 17 41 to 43, and Prudential's Reply Memorandum at 36-42.

18 Prudential references numerous exhibits in support of 19 this contention, including Gaultieri's own admissions to some 20 of Prudential's mismanagement or misuse of funds. See 21 Prudential's Statement of Undisputed facts at ¶¶ 34-43
22 and 49 to 66.

23 Thus, Prudential claims that the Trustee is unable to 24 demonstrate in its contract or tort claims that Prudential's 25 conduct directly and proximately caused any damage to the IVC

1 project or the debtor.

2           However, based on the evidence just discussed, namely the 3 Sauer Declaration and perhaps the Cordone Declaration, it is 4 apparent that the cause of the demise of the IVC project is 5 disputed. This makes summary judgment on causation grounds 6 inappropriate.

7           Summing up my discussion so far, the evidence submitted
8 supports summary judgment for Prudential on the Trustee's 9 breach of contract claims with respect to Prudential's failure 10 to purchase or refinance their Lava loan, any alleged 11 anticipatory breach of contract, and a breach of contract in 12 connection with the delay or failure to fund the April 18th 13 draw request.

14           However, the evidence does not support summary judgment 15 on the Trustee's breach of contract claims with respect to the 16 December 1, 2015, January 14, 2016, February 10, 2016 draw 17 requests, and a February 12th, 2016 escrow release request.

18           Before considering the Trustee's claim that Prudential 19 also breached its contract with the debtor by breaching the 20 implied duty of good faith and fair dealing, I pause briefly
21 to make two observations. First, I am aware of Prudential's 22 argument that the debtor was in default of the construction 23 loan agreement by virtue of its misappropriation of draw 24 requests, which if deemed a material breach, would excuse 25 Prudential from further performance of its obligations under

1 the parties' agreement.

2 Further, it does appear that the B. Rilie,
3 Advisory Services expert report submitted by Prudential 4 suggests these misappropriations preceded all of the draw 5 requests that I had previously discussed. However, after 6 reviewing Prudential's memoranda and arguments, I conclude 7 that Prudential has not argued that the debtor was in material
8 default of the construction loan agreement prior to February 9 2016.

10 To the extent Prudential has raised the argument
11 regarding the earlier misappropriations, it has done so only 12 with respect to its lack of causation argument and its in pari
13 delicto defense

14 The potential success of a more
15 comprehensive argument on this point also requires an analysis 16 of the Construction Loan Agreement and a demonstration that 17 the default of this nature is one that does not require a 18 declaration and notice of default. Prudential has not 19 developed this argument, and it is not the Court's role to do 20 so on Prudential's behalf. Therefore, at this time, I will 21 not consider this theory of defense.

22 My decision in this regard is reinforced by the overall 23 record before me regarding the interrelationship among the 24 various Gaultieri affiliates. While I am aware that some of 25 the alleged misappropriations, as described in the expert

1 report, appeared to be for the personal benefit of Gaultieri,
2 many may also have been for the benefit of other Gaultieri
3 real estate development entities.

4       Considering the provisions of the various loan agreements 5 that I have already discussed, which contemplated that 6 revenues from one entity might be available to another entity, 7 it is possible that as finder of fact, I may be persuaded by 8 the Trustee that the parties' relationship was such that this 9 type of conduct, the use of the funds in the manner described 10 by the expert report, was known and even countenanced by 11 Prudential, and does not support a finding that it constituted 12 a material breach by the Debtor. In any event, all of this 13 requires me to exercise my role as fact finder, which I cannot 14 do on summary judgment.

15       I turn now to the Trustee's claim that Prudential also 16 breached its contract with the debtor by breaching the implied 17 duty of good faith and fair dealing. The Trustee alleges that 18 Prudential breached this duty through declarations of sham 19 defaults, efforts to change reporting and draw requirements, 20 delays or refusals to honor or fund draw requests, and efforts 21 to take over the IVC project in violation of a court order.

22       In response, Prudential insists it was only acting in a 23 manner consistent with the clear terms of the lending 24 contracts. Since some of the Trustee's claims for express 25 breaches of the contract will survive, I will not exhaustively

1 analyze the issue of whether Prudential breached its implied
2 duty of good faith and fair dealing.

3 Based solely on the evidence already discussed, it is 4 apparent that the Trustee potentially can succeed on this 5 claim. Take, for instance, the evidence related to the draw
6 requests. I have already explained why the evidence supports
7 the Trustee's claim for breach of contract under Section 5 8 point -- for breach of contract.

9 Under Section 5.3 of the Construction Loan Agreement, 10 Prudential was obligated to fund or deny draw requests within 11 three days of receipt of the request. However, the 2014
12 construction loan agreement also specifies that the draw 13 request shall be in a form and content satisfactory ro the 14 bank, and that Prudential has a right to approve the form and 15 content of such draw requests. See Construction Loan 16 Agreement ¶ 5.2.

17 Thus, Prudential may be able to demonstrate at trial that 18 its demands for additional documentation in the draw request 19 was duly authorized by the contractual provision. Indeed, it 20 appears that way. Nevertheless, Prudential's sudden 21 insistence on additional documentation may constitute a breach 22 of the implied duty of good faith and fair dealing, 23 particularly if it was motivated by extrinsic purposes, as the 24 as the Trustee appears to maintain.

25 As I have stated earlier, the implied duty may be

1 implicated where contracting parties exercises a contractual 2 right, but does so in a manner that is unreasonable and 3 oppressive, and takes undue advantage of the counter party to 4 frustrate the overriding purpose of the contract.

5 Another case I would cite for that proposition is 6 Tanenbaum, v. Chase Home Finance, LLC, 2014
7 WL 4063358 at *7 (E.D. Pa.

8 August 18th, 2014).

9 By abruptly demanding additional documentation that 10 perhaps it had never sought before, and perhaps about not 11 being clear as to what it needed in its new demands, Prudential 12 may have inched over the line and breached the implied duty.
13 What I would say at this point is that the record developed 14 for me on summary judgment does not eliminate this 15 possibility. And I would need to see all of the evidence at 16 trial to make a final determination on it.

17 Prudential points to Gaultieri's deposition in which he 18 admitted that certain types of verification information sought 19 by Prudential for the draw requests was reasonable. See 20 Gaultieri Deposition at 499-500.

21 However, the Cordone Sauer's Declarations paint a 22 more complicated story. Cordone states that Prudential 23 attempted to change the requirements for draw requests
24 multiple times. See Cordone Declaration ¶ 42

25 According to Cordone, Prudential refused to provide a

1 complete list of new draw requirements, even after his 2 repeated requests that Prudential do so. See Cordone
3 Declaration ¶¶ 27-28.

4 On February 18th, 2016, Cordone e-mailed Prudential and 5 stated those concerns, and complained that it was difficult 6 for the debtor to hit, depicted by Cordone as a 7 moving target. See Cordone Declaration at Exhibit 26.

8 Bernie Sauer, the project manager, who sat in on 9 conference calls between Gaultieri and Prudential, 10 supports the view that the bank's request for 11 information created a moving target. Sauer also stated 12 that a representative of Prudential visited the site in 13 January 2016, and indicated that he had checks written out to 14 subcontractors in his desk drawer, but would not release them 15 without an agreement from the debtor to alter the process for 16 funding requests. See Sauer Declaration ¶ 17.

17 Taken together, I find this evidence creates a disputed 18 issue of material fact regarding the manner in which 19 Prudential exercised its contractual rights. Even though the 20 Construction Loan Agreement gave Prudential discretion
21 over the form and content of draw requests, the implied duty
22 of good faith and fair dealing required Prudential exercise 23 that discretion in a reasonable and unoppressive manner.

24 Accepting Sauer and Cordone's Declarations, as I must, 25 unless contradicted by other indisputable evidence,

1 Prudential's alleged conduct could demonstrate a violation of 2 the implied duty of good faith and fair dealing. See
3 generally Somers v. Somers, 613 A.2d 1211, 1213
4 Pa. Super. Ct 1992).

5 The Somers case cites the Restatement Second of Contracts 6 for the proposition that bad faith includes the evasion of the 7 spirit of the bargain, and abuse of power to specify terms.
8 Further, the Trustee points to numerous other instances that 9 allegedly demonstrate Prudential's bad faith conduct. In 10 particular, Cordone asserted that Prudential was attempting to 11 manufacture or find a default as part of a larger attempt to 12 undermine the Debtor, and permit Prudential to de-leverage its 13 lending position. See Cordone Declaration ¶ 45.

14

15 I am skeptical that such an allegation, if proved, would 16 by itself constitute a violation of the implied duty of good 17 faith and fair dealing. However, such allegations do 18 potentially add weight to the scale when evaluating in the 19 totality of circumstances whether Prudential breached its 20 implied duty of good faith and fair dealing.

21 For these reasons, I find that Prudential has not 22 demonstrated an entitlement to summary judgment regarding the 23 Trustee's claims for breach of the implied duty of good faith 24 and fair dealings.

25 I next address Prudential's motion to dismiss the 1 Trustee's claim for tortious interference with contract.

2 Pennsylvania law recognizes the tort of intentional
3 interference with an existing contractual relationship. See 4 Adler Barash, Daniel Levin, and Creskoff,
5 v. Epstein, 393 A.2d 1175, 1182 (Pa. 1978)

6
7 The general elements that a plaintiff must establish for 8 such a claim are the existence of a contractual relationship 9 between a plaintiff and a third party; purposeful action by 10 defendants, specifically intended to harm an existing 11 relationship; the absence of a privilege or 12 justification on the part of the defendant; and legal 13 damage to the plaintiff as a result of the defendant's 14 conduct. See Acumed, LLC v. Advanced Surgical 15 Services Incorporated, 561 F.3d 199 at 212 (3d 16 Cir. 2009). See also Brokerage Concepts Incorporated v.
17 U.S. Health Care Inc., 140 F.3d 494, 530 (3d 18 Cir. 1998).

19 However, Pennsylvania Courts have not deemed all forms of 20 interference as tortious. Of particular relevance here, 21 Pennsylvania courts distinguish between interference directed 22 at a third party's performance under a contract with the 23 plaintiff, and interference directed at plaintiff's own 24 performance under that contract.

25 Section 766 of the Restatement sets forth the definition

1 for tortious interference with a contract that a defendant
2 directs at a third party's performance. It provides that one
3 who intentionally and improperly interferes with a performance
4 of a contract, other than a contract to marry, between another 5 and a third person by inducing or otherwise causing the third 6 person not to perform the contract is subject to liability for 7 the pecuniary loss resulting from the failure of the third
8 person to perform the contract. Restatement Second 9 of Torts, §766 (1979).

10 By contrast, Section 766A of the Restatement provides 11 the a different definition for tortious interference of 12 contract. It provides:
13 "One who intentionally and improperly interferes 14 with the performance of a contract, except a contract to 15 marry, between another and a third person by preventing the 16 other, that is, the plaintiff, from performing the contract or 17 causing his performance to become more expensive or burdensome 18 is subject to liability to the other for the pecuniary loss 19 resulting to him."

20 The Pennsylvania Supreme Court has adopted the definition
21 for tortious interference as set forth in Restatement Section 22 766. Adler Barash, 393 A.2d at 1182.
23 See also Windsor Securities Inc. v. Park Third Life
24 Insurance Company, 986 F.2d 655 at 659 (3d Cir.1993).

1           The Pennsylvania appellate courts have declined to 2   expand the tort of interference with an existing contract to 3   include the type of interference described in §766A
4   of the Restatement. See Phillips v. Selig, 959
5   A.2d 420, 436, n.13 (Pa. Super. Ct.2008);
6   see also Karpis, v. Massachusetts Mutual
7   Life Insurance Company, 2018 WL 1142189 at *13
8   (E.D. Pa., Feb. 28, 2018).

9           Thus, to substantiate a cause of action in Pennsylvania 10   for tortious interference with contracts, a plaintiff must 11   show that the defendant's interfering contract was intended to 12   induce or otherwise cause the third party not to perform the 13   contract.

14          Where a defendant interferes only with the plaintiff's 15   own performance under a contract, such conduct will not result 16   in liability under a tortious interference theory. See 17   Karpis. In its submissions,
18   Prudential argues that none of Prudential's actions were 19   directed at or toward any third party that had a contract with 20   the debtor. Rather, all of Prudential's actions recited by 21   the Trustee in support of the tortious interference claim, 22   such as delaying payment of draw requests, were directed to 23   the Debtor.

24          Prudential further argues that any harm the Debtor 25   suffered from its subcontractors refusing to work due to non-

1 payment was the direct result of the debtor's diversion and 2 misappropriation of funds. In response, the Trustee argues
3 that Prudential tortiously interfered with its subcontractors 4 and suppliers on the IVC project, and with purchasers of 5 residential properties by refusing to disburse funds under the 6 terms of the Construction Loan Agreement.

7 Prudential insisted that it pay the subcontractors and 8 suppliers directly, but then refused to disburse the funds 9 when requested for the subcontractor's work. According to the 10 Trustee, this failure to pay the subcontractors constitutes 11 interference directed at third parties, and resulted in damage 12 to the debtor when these subcontractors refused to provide 13 additional services at the IVC project.

14 The Trustee also asserts that Prudential's failure to 15 fund the IVC project was targeted at the purchases of the IVC 16 homes, IVC project homes, because its failure to pay the 17 subcontractors and vendors necessarily prevent completion of 18 the homes.

19 Upon review of the parties' arguments, I conclude that 20 Prudential has demonstrated its entitlement to summary
21 judgment on the Trustee's claim for tortious interference.
22 Section 766 of the Restatement requires that the defendant
23 have induced or otherwise caused third parties here, 24 subcontractors, vendors, and homeowners, not to perform their 25 contracts with the debtor.

1           The comments to Section 766 explain and give examples for 2   the terms induced and otherwise caused. The term induce 3   represents persuasion and operates in the mind of the third
4   party induced. See Restatement § 766, Comment h. Inducement 5   leaves the third party free to perform its contract with the 6   plaintiff, but the third party has been persuaded or 7   intimidated into not performing.

8           By contrast, the term "otherwise causing" refers to 9   situations where the interfering party leaves the third party
10   with no choice by rendering performance of the contract
11   impossible. The interfering parties' imprisonment of a third 12   party or disruption of goods that the third party was to 13   deliver to the plaintiff are examples of this kind of 14   causation.

15          Applied here, the evidence does not show in any way that 16   Prudential induced or otherwise caused the subcontractors, 17   vendors, and home purchasers not to perform their contracts 18   with the Debtor. Instead, the evidence shows that 19   Prudential's actions, if anything, simply interfered with the 20   Debtor's own performance of its contracts with the 21   subcontractors, vendors, and home purchasers.

22          Take, for instance, the home purchasers. The Trustee has 23   submitted a list of persons who submitted deposits for the 24   purchase of homes on specific lots in the IVC project. The 25   Trustee argues that Prudential's refusal to fund draw requests

1 was directed at the purchasers of these homes, because of 2 failure to pay the subcontractors and vendors necessarily 3 prevents completion of the homes.

4 However, the evidence failed to demonstrate that 5 Prudential induced or otherwise caused these home purchasers
6 not to perform on their contracts. Rather, it is apparent 7 that Prudential's refusal to fund certain draw requests simply 8 interfered with the Debtor's own performance, that is building 9 the homes, that the purchasers had placed deposits upon.

10 Similarly, Prudential's failure to pay the subcontractors 11 and vendors relates to the debtor's failure to perform on its 12 contracts with those third parties. The Construction Loan 13 Agreement specifies that Prudential would only fulfill draw
14 request applications after work was completed on the IVC
15 project. See Construction Loan Agreement ¶ 445.2. The evidence 16 is that the subcontractors would bill the debtor for work they 17 had already completed. See Trustee's Response ¶ 19 and 18 Exhibit R; Gaultieri Deposition at 497-498;
19 and Cordone Declaration at Exhibit 31.

20 Thus, for the contracts between the Debtor and the 21 subcontractors, the Debtor's failure to pay was a failure
22 of its own performance. By failing to fulfill draw requests, 23 Prudential interfered only with the Debtor's performance, 24 since the subcontractors had already performed their work.

25 The Trustee points to no evidence in the record that

1 would show that Prudential's actions interfered with the 2 subcontractor or vendor's ability to perform under their 3 contracts with the debtor.

4 Thus, while the evidence may demonstrate a theory of 5 liability under Restatement §766A, it does not show
6 tortious interference under Restatement §766. And as I 7 stated earlier, Section 766A has not been adopted in 8 Pennsylvania.

9 Accordingly, Prudential is entitled to summary judgment 10 on the Trustee's claim for tortious interference with the 11 contract.

12 In response to both the Trustee's tort and contract 13 claim, Prudential also raised the defense know as in pari
14 delicto. Prudential argues that in pari delicto operates as a 15 defense to liability, where plaintiff's own wrongful action 16 substantially causes the damages the plaintiff seeks to 17 recover. Applied here, Prudential contends that the debtor
18 and Gaultieri's alleged misconduct, including fraudulent 19 inducement of Prudential, fraudulent misappropriation of 20 funds, and mismanagement of the IVC project prevent the 21 Trustee from recovering on the breach of contract claim and 22 the tortious interference claim, (although the latter is a 23 moot point, since I'm granting 24 summary judgment on that claim on other grounds.

25 The Trustee responds by arguing that the defense of in

1    pari delicto requires that the plaintiff participated in or 2    bears substantial equal responsibility for the underlying 3    illegality giving rise to damages. Since neither the Debtor 4    nor Gaultieri participated in or is responsible for 5    Prudential's breach of contract, the Trustee argues that the 6    evidence does not support a defense of in pari delicto.

7            I conclude that Prudential has not demonstrated 8    entitlement to summary judgment based on the defense of in 9    pari delicto. At the outset, I note my skepticism that in 10   pari delicto applies here at all. Stated succinctly, the 11   doctor provides that the plaintiff may not assert a claim 12   again a defendant if the plaintiff bears fault for the claim.
13   See Official Committee of Unsecured Creditors v. RF Lafferty
14   and Company, Incorporate, 267 F.3d 340 (Third Circuit, 2001).
15   The Pennsylvania Supreme Court has noted that the defense of 16   in pari delicto has been applied principally in cases 17   involving illegal contracts or illegal conduct. See Official 18   Committee of Unsecured Creditors of Allegheny Health Education
19   and Research Foundation v. PriceWaterhouseCoopers, 20   989 A.2d 313, 328 (Pa. 2010).

21

22

23            Under Pennsylvania law, if parties engaged in fraud or 24   other illegality seek a common law redress relative to 25   matters in which they bear sufficient culpability, the

1 doctrine of in pari delicto relieves the courts from lending
2 their offices to mediating disputes among wrongdoers.
3 See Allegheny Health and Education Research Foundation
4 989 A.2d at 329. For in pari delicto to apply, the plaintiff
5 must be an active, voluntary participant in the wrongful 6 conduct or transaction, and bear substantial, equal, or 7 greater responsibility for the underlying illegalities 8 compared to the defendant.

9 Applied here, it is difficult to see how Prudential can 10 successfully raise an in pari delicto defense. The contracts 11 that form the basis of the Trustee's claims, whether the 12 lending contract between the debtor and Prudential, or the 13 contracts between the debtor and third parties, are not 14 themselves illegal, nor is there any evidence that the Debtor
15 bears any responsibility for Prudential's alleged contract
16 breach actions for which the Trustee seeks damages.

17 Prudential's allegations of various misconduct on the 18 part of the debtor in Gaultieri may serve to reduce or 19 eliminate liability that the debtor -- that Prudential might 20 have towards the bankruptcy estate should the Trustee prevail 21 on any of his claims. But as currently presented, 22 Prudential's allegations seem more properly raised as 23 conventional contractual defenses to the Trustee's contractual 24 claims. For these reasons, I find that summary judgment is 25 not warranted in Prudential's favor based on in pari delicto.

1 Prudential also argues that even if I do not grant 2 summary judgment on the lender liability claims, I should 3 dismiss as a matter of law the Trustee's demand for lost 4 profits. Prudential asserts that the lost profits alleged by 5 the Trustee are speculative, at best. Prudential points out
6 that the Trustee has not produced an expert report in support 7 of its alleged lost profits. And Prudential emphasizes that 8 the Debtor never completed any significant portion of the IVC
9 project.

10 In response, the Trustee argues that no expert testimony
11 is needed to establish lost profits, as courts have recognized 12 that an owner or executive of a business may be competent to 13 testify regarding projected lost profits. Moreover, the 14 Trustee relies upon Prudential's own projection for sales and 15 compares them to the actual sales made while the Trustee has 16 been in charge of the project. See Trustee's Response, 17 Exhibit T, at ¶¶ 25 to 31.

18 I agree with the Trustee on this issue. Prudential has 19 not pointed out any case law that states that expert testimony 20 is required to establish lost profits. In fact, it appears 21 the courts do not impose such a requirement. Lightning Lube
22 Incorporated v. Witco Corporation, 4 F.3d 1153 at 1175 23 (3d Cir. 1993).

24 Additionally, Prudential does not challenge the basic and 25 intuitive methodology by which the Trustee has calculated the

1 lost profits of the IVC project. Accordingly, Prudential has 2 not demonstrated that the evidence demonstrates an entitlement
3 to judgment in its favor as a matter of law regarding lost 4 profits. The issue is one that requires fact finding, which 5 is inappropriate at the summary judgment stage.

6 Lastly, I addressed Prudential's motion for summary
7 judgment on the Trustee's claim
8 for equitable subordination. I have previously discussed 9 the elements of equitable subordination in an earlier opinion
10 in this case, In re Island View Crossing LP, 604 B.R. 181, 11 202-03. I incorporate that discussion by reference.
12 I need only review a few of the legal principles regarding 13 equitable subordination at this time.

14 Under Section 510(c)(1) of the Bankruptcy Code, a 15 bankruptcy court may, under principles of equitable 16 subordination, subordinate for purposes of distribution all or 17 part of an allowed claim to all or part of another allowed 18 claim, or all or part of an allowed interest to all or part of 19 another allowed interest.

20 The Third Circuit has specified that equitable 21 subordination is proper when the claimant has engaged in some 22 type of inequitable conduct, the misconduct resulted in injury 23 to the creditors or conferred an unfair advantage on the 24 claimant. And, equitable subordination is consistent with the 25 provisions of the Bankruptcy Code. See In re Windstar

1 Communication Inc., 554 F.3d 382,411-12.

2 In its submissions, Prudential argues that the Trustee's
3 equitable subordination claim also merits summary judgment.
4 The starting point for this argument is Prudential's 5 insistence is that summary judgment is appropriate on all of 6 the Trustee's other lender liability claims.

7 If I agreed to dismiss all of the 8 lender liability claims, then Prudential would have been 9 found to have acted appropriately in accord with its 10 contractual rights. The necessary implication for such a 11 finding is that the Trustee would be unable to establish the 12 requisite inequitable conduct for equitable subordination to 13 apply.

14 So to some extent, at least, Prudential's argument is 15 contingent on my dismissal of the Trustee's other lender 16 liability claims. However, I have found that at least some of 17 the Trustee's claims survive. Most importantly, the Trustee's 18 claim for breach of the implied duty of good faith and fair 19 dealing has survived summary judgment. At bottom, while the 20 parties are entitled to enforce contracts to the letter, even 21 to the great discomfort of their trading partners, the 22 enforcement of a contract can turn into inequitable conduct.
23 The disputed facts here that permit the implied duty claims to 24 survive summary judgment also tend to support the equitable 25 subordination claim.

1 While it is possible that as fact finder I might find 2 tfacts that render the implied duty and 3 the equitable subordination claim meritorious, or I might find 4 both claims non-meritorious, or the implied duty claim 5 meritorious, but the equitable subordination claim non-6 meritorious, those determinations all involve fact finding 7 that I will not engage in at the summary judgment stage.

8 Therefore, Prudential's motion for summary judgment on 9 the equitable subordination claim will be denied. That 10 concludes this lengthy bench opinion. When it is ready to be 11 docketed as a transcript of this recitation, I will do so with 12 an accompanying consistent order.

13 (Court adjourned)
14

15 CERTIFICATION*
16 I certify that the foregoing is a correct transcript from the 17 electronic sound recording of the proceedings in the above-18 entitled matter.
19

20
21
22

8/23/21

23
24 _____
Signature of Transcriber

_____
Date

*The transcript has been modified and edited by the court prior to its docketing, but is largely the same as the electric sound recording.

Date: August 24, 2021

_____
ERIC L. FRANK
U.S. BANKRUPTCY JUDGE